POST OFFICE IS GROWING.

Receipts for Last Quarter Larger Than Ever Before.

VERY BIG CHRISTMAS STAMP SALE.

At Present Rate of Increase in Revenue Another Clerk May Be Had Soon.

The report of the Palmer post office receipts for the last quarter shows that the office is growing rapidly and apparently is destined soon to take its place in the front rank of its class. The quarter's receipts were $3175, or at the rate of over $12,000 per year. The December receipts were over $1200 When it is remembered that the $10,000 mark necessary to secure free carrier delivery was reached only two years ago, the volume of increase—practically at the rate of $1000 a year—must be conceded to be above the average in offices of this size. Only a small additional increase in receipts is needed to secure for the office another clerk, which is likely to come within a year at the present rate. In this connection it is interesting to know that over 22,000 one-cent stamps were sold Christmas week, and over 19,000 two-cent stamps.

That the clerk is needed is agreed by those who know the work the Palmer office has to do. The smallest part of its work is the handling of the mail to and from Palmer alone. Large numbers of sacks are brought to the Palmer office every day to be sorted here and sent out again, not a piece of the mail they contain stopping in Palmer. These sacks and ponches come in from all points of the compass, and are sorted here for sending out on the C. V. road both north and south, the Ware River road, the villages, Wales and Brimfield and the trolley mail cast. A fair example of the amount of this work is the 40 sacks which had to be sorted out of the 43 which came in Christmas Monday morning. And the work along this line is growing heavier every day.

Ware Woman, Native of Brimfield, Dead.

Mrs. Lewis N. Gilbert, 70, of Ware died Tuesday morning at her home after being in ill health for several years. Mrs. Gilbert was born in Brimfield May 22, 1840. Her maiden name was Mary D. Lane and she was the only child of Otis and Miranda Hamilton Lane. Her father moved to Ware when his daughter was five years old, or about 1845. He was associated in business for a long time with Addison Sandford and was treasurer of the Ware Savings Bank for 30 years. Mrs. Gilbert as a girl attended school in Ware, at Monson Academy in Monson, and in 1859 graduated as the valedictorian of her class from Lasell Seminary in Auburndale. She lived at her home until her marriage to Mr. Gilbert on December 21, 1864. After the marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert lived in the house now occupied by Elbridge Dundar and which then stood near the corner of South and Chestnut streets. In 1872 Mr. Gilbert began the erection of his fine residence on South street and moved into it the following year. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert have visited the different parts of this country and Canada, but aside from these trips have lived at home since 1873 quite closely. Mrs. Gilbert was devoted to church work and a great student of the Bible. For 40 years she taught in Sunday school classes at the Congregational churches in Ware and Gilbertville.

WARE.

Death of John McArdle.

John McArdle, 70, died Monday morning at his home on Walnut street after a several months' illness with heart trouble. He was born in Ireland, but had lived in Ware many years. He was employed formerly as a mason's tender, but had retired from active business some years ago. He never married and had lived with his sister, Miss Rose McArdle, for some time The funeral was held Wednesday morning in All Saints' church and burial was in St. William's cemetery.

Louis Morris, one of the high school basketball players, suffered a fracture of the left collar bone in the game with Northampton last Saturday night. The injury was thought to be simply a wrench of the shoulder and no doctor was called until late at night. Morris was one of the best players on the team.

Rev. Frederic W. Smith began Sunday his pastorate of the Unitarian church, preaching a sermon appropriate to the new year. Mr. Smith is not married, but has a mother and sister, who have lived with him. The latter teaches school in Northampton, and the mother will go to that city to spend the winter with her, so for the present Mr. Smith will be the only one in the family to live in Ware.

Frank K. Southworth, president of the Ware Lumber Company, has gone to the Pacific coast with Timothy Paige of Hardwick. The men have been planning the trip for some time, it being partly a business trip for Mr. Paige, who will look up matters connected with the inheritance of money from an uncle, Calvin Paige, who died in New York about two years ago and who held much property in the far West.

Brimfield Man Dead.

John F. Converse, Native and Long-time Resident, Once Postmaster.

John F. Converse, 55, a well-known resident of Brimfield, died Sunday morning after being in ill health for some time.

Mr. Converse was born in Brimfield, being the son of Marquis Lyon Converse and grandson of Marquis Converse, who was the second postmaster in Brimfield. He was educated in the public schools and the Hitchcock Free Academy. He was married February 4, 1879, to Miss Lizzie Lyon Wyles, the daughter of Henry Wyles and granddaughter of Hon. John Wyles of that town.

Mr. Converse passed most of his life in Brimfield, and for about eight years held the appointment of postmaster when the office was kept in the famous old corner store. This property Mr. Converse owned from 1881 to 1897, when it was destroyed by fire on January 1. He was actively engaged in business there for some years, succeeding a line of well-known Brimfield citizens, who have carried on trade at what was the most important stand in the section in the first half of the last century, the store building having been erected in 1802

Besides his widow, he leaves five children, Albert F., Anna, wife of Arthur Fanenf, Miss Lydia, Marquis L and Frederick L., all of Brimfield, except Mrs. Fanenf, who lives in Stnrbridge He also leaves a brother, Horatio L Converse of Springfield.

Painful Accident to Ware Man.

Timothy Morlarty of Main street in Ware met with a painful accident Monday afternoon. He went to the ice pond of John Malboeuf off the main West Warren road to see if he could get a job. After leaving there he went on a road which is used but little. In trying to climb over a wire fence he fell, breaking two bones in his right leg. He was unable to make anyone hear his cries and could crawl but a short distance before it was dark. He was obliged to lie in the road all night and was not found until late Tuesday morning. It rained very hard during the night and when discovered he was very wet and suffering from cold and exposure. He was carried to his home, where he was attended by Dr. D. M. Ryan, who thinks the man will recover.

BRIMFIELD.

House Destroyed By Fire.

The house of Charles F. George, formerly the home of James Read Brown, situated on the Brookfield road and overlooking Sherman Lake, was entirely destroyed by fire with its contents early yesterday morning. The fire was due to a burning chimney, which was discovered early in the evening. Supposing the fire to be extinguished Mr. George retired, but Mrs. George remained up, busying herself with some sewing. About 2 o'clock she discovered the woodwork about the chimney to be on fire and the house was soon in flames. Mrs. George ran down to the Sherman place about quarter of a mile distant, but by the time George Miller, who lives in the farmhouse of the Sherman's, reached the scene of the fire it was too late to save even any of the furniture. People in the village were awakened by telephone from the central office, to learn that there was a fire in the direction of the lake but it could not be located at once. The town's chemical engine was taken to the fire but the house was all ablaze, the alarm being so late Mr and Mrs George lost all their clothing and furniture. There was an insurance on the house and furniture.

Death of Former Resident.

The body of Miss Lavina M. Baker was brought to Brimfield for burial Monday. Rev. William Jennings officiated at the service. Miss Baker was a native of Brimfield, the daughter of Calvin and Olive (Draper) Baker, and her girlhood was spent at the Baker Homestead in the northeast part of the town. She was educated in the town school in that district and the Hitchcock Free Academy. She had spent much of the time in Boston in recent years, but came every summer to the place which she owned in Brimfield which had been a part of her father's estate and which was distinguished historically as the birthplace of Erastus Fairbanks and his brothers, Joseph and Thaddeus Fairbanks. Miss Baker had been in failing health for some years, but the end came most unexpectedly, as she had enjoyed a Christmas gathering at the home of her sister, Mrs. Pike, in Salem. She was 59 years of age. She leaves a brother, Moses E Baker of Springfield, and two sisters, Mrs. Ella Baker Smith of Springville, N. Y, and Mrs. Alice Baker Pike of Salem

At the annual meeting of the Congregational church Edward B. Brown was elected secretary, Miner Corbin treasurer, and Fred Bissell auditor. Edward B Brown was reelected deacon for a term of four years.

ENJOYABLE BLACK-FACE.

The Knights of Columbus Score Big Success.

EVERY SEAT IN OPERA HOUSE TAKEN

Plenty of Local Hits. Every Person in the Circle a K. of C. Member.

Palmer council of the Knights of Columbus gave in the opera house Wednesday evening the minstrel show which it has had in rehearsal for many weeks. Every seat in the house was filled,—and there was an extra row at that,—and the S. R O. sign was hung out early; in fact, at a conservative estimate, there were about 300 people who wished to see the show but could not secure tickets.

The curtain disclosed a triple circle of black-face, numbering over 40 There were eight end men, gorgeous in crimson trousers and clawhammer coats of the same color. Mr. John J. Conway was interlocutor, and was the only one in the circle who wore his own face for the occasion. The opening overture was carried with dash and spirit, and all seemed to go well until the close, when there was a grand smash at one side, which was explained as only a collision between the auto of a well-known professional citizen and a heavy team. The "gags" were all local, and included some very good ones. There were the usual number of songs, both comic and sentimental, and each singer received an encore, though the extra large bouquets were given Pete Broniliette, D. F. Dillon and Jap Bressette. Brouillette showed that he knew a few dancing steps not usually in evidence, and he was kept at work until he refused to respond again. A particularly pleasing selection was "Silver Threads Among the Gold," by J. P. O'Connor; J J. Donahue's "In Memory" was also well rendered and received.

In the olio the Knowles brothers, a couple of young lads from the Southbridge council, did some clever wooden shoe dancing, and the Columbia quartet, from the council at Indian Orchard, rendered several well-chosen selections in a pleasing manner. Billy McDonald had a monologue on "Timely topics," in which he "hit up" a few persons and local matters not touched on by the end men, and received a generous round of applause. Stereopticon slides of Dr. Cook's famous trip to the north pole were given, Mr. McDonald acting as lecturer for the scenes; this was one of the most laughable features of the entertainment, but cannot be fitly described in print and needs to be seen to be appreciated; D. E. O'Connor was responsible for the photos, all taken in town. A pleasing moving picture film closed the entertainment.

The council is to be congratulated on the merit of the performance, and the fact that it moved without a hitch. It is worth noting that, with the exceptions of the performers mentioned above, every person on the stage was a member of Palmer council of the Knights; also that with two exceptions, none of them had ever taken part in a minstrel performance before. The entertainment was under the direction of Mr. J F. Luman.

It is probable that the performance will be repeated at an early date, the proceeds being given to the District Nurse Association. It is thought there will be no difficulty in filling the opera house again.

WALES.

Death of John Royce.

The funeral of John Royce, 83, who died Tuesday morning after an illness of only a few days, was held at his home yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Mr. Royce was a native of this town and with the exception of a few years spent on Long Island had always been a resident of this or the adjacent towns of Brimfield and Palmer. He had been engaged in the meat business and in farming, and was a man who was respected and well-liked because of his kindly disposition. About two years ago Mr. and Mrs. Royce, formerly Sarah Morgan of Bondsville, celebrated their golden wedding. Besides his wife and brother, George Royce of Brimfield, he leaves two sons, Lyman Royce of Bennington, Vt., and Milton J. Royce of Three Rivers, and four daughters, Misses Eva and Sadie Royce of this town, Mrs. Walter Bedell of Brimfield and Mrs. Homer O lell of Three Rivers.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 6, 1911.

A MISAPPREHENSION.

Judging from the variety of comments heard concerning its condition, there is evidently a misapprehension as to who is responsible for the North Main street macadam and who should care for it. The conditions are these: The road was built under contract made by the selectmen, according to plans furnished gratis by the state highway commission in its capacity of assisting towns to secure as good roads as possible. The commission also furnished—gratis—an expert supervisor for the work, the saving to the town on these two items being considerable. The surfacing of the road with oil and tar was done by the highway commission's men and machinery at cost. The whole expense was borne by the town and it is up to the town to care for the road. The necessity for sanding at the present time is because the tar coating—hardened by the cold—picks up under the sharp calks of the winter shoes on horses and does not pack back into place again as it will in the warmer weather of summer. This is apparently no fault of construction, but a condition which the weather is alone responsible for and which will disappear with h gher temperature

THINGS are done quite differently in good old Lunnon, don'-cher-know, than on this side of the pond. Over there on Tnesday, when the police wished to arrest two anarchists they had located in a house in a thickly settled neighborhood, they called the landlady down from the upper floor of the building and then reconnoitered from a distance until they drew the fire of the suspects, one officer being badly wounded. Police reinforcements were then called out until there were 1500 men surrounding the block; also a detachment of infantry and a company of artillery with a machine gun. The beseiged were pleutifully supplied with ammunition and a bombardment was kept up on both sides from early in the morning until about 2 in the afternoon, and ceased only then because the building had been set on fire and was burned down, the two men with it; firemeu were called ont to protect the adjacent property and the house was allowed to burn. Over here, in any city which boasts a department of police, a few men would have gone to the house early, kicked in the door and taken their men, then investigated afterward London is feeling pretty well ashamed of the performance, as well it may, for the London "Bobby" is supposed to represent the highest type of police efficiency.

THERE will be no lack of an "Amen" chorus to the following, credited to Associate Justice Harlan of the United States supreme court after he and Chief Justice White had narrowly escaped being run down by an auto which dashed upon them a side street in Washington:

Some day a real man from the West, from the plains—from that section of the country where men do not permit other men to trifle with their feelings—some day such a man will come to Washington. He will walk down Pennsylvania avenue, just as you and I are walking. As he starts across the street an automobile will come bowling along at break neck speed, and come within an inch of taking off a leg. It will be an old story with the driver, but a new one with the man from the West. That particular man from the West will pull his shooting iron from his pocket and fill the reckless driver full of holes, and judge though I am, I believe the man from the West will go scot free.

Similar sentiments have found expression many times in this section of the country, and it certainly would not be in the nature of a surprise if the deed follows the thought some of these days.

MAYOR LATHROP of Springfield wants the growing use of the streets of the city by trolley express cars inquired into. Go ahead, Mayor. Inquire and be hanged. The animal has got its head in and the rest of the body will follow. Of course, the express and freight cars ought not to be run so as to interfere with passenger traffic. We say ought not to. But if Springfield's experience is anything like Palmer's Mayor Lathrop will find that there are many things which are but yet ought not to be, and exceedingly difficult to get changed.

THE increase in the post office receipts during the past few years show that the volume of business in Palmer is steadily on the increase. And the census returns show a healthy growth in population and an increase in dwellings of nearly 10 per cent in the last five years. The valuation of the town has also increased materially in that time. The construction of the new railroad to Providence in the near future cannot help but bring additional business to the town. Surely the outlook for a "Bigger, busier" town is bright.

JUDGE NEFF of Cleveland, Ohio, blames the high cost of living for the greater portion of the divorces (he granted 428 during the term of court just closed), "High prices coupled with small incomes, resulting in an intense struggle to keep up appearances and gratify social ambitions" were the cause. He'd be nearer right, probably, if he'd have confined himself to the "intense struggle to gratify social ambitions" part of his reason. There are too many with an automobile taste and a one-horse income who are not willing to be content with the horse.

THERE seems to be a marked difference of opinion among the followers of Mrs. Eddy as to whether or not she is to return again. Mrs. Stetson of New York, who was set out of the inner circle some time ago, professes to believe that she will, while from Boston, the home of Mrs. Eddy, word is given out that nothing of the kind is expected. Possibly at the Hub they have remembrance of numerous attempts on the part of various persons, one prominent, to "come back."

BOSTON'S postmaster is receiving anything but encomiums from the press and the public for his fining of two letter carriers $300 each for leaving their routes long enough to get a cup of coffee on a cold day. Sitting in a warm snug office and handing out "lemons" of generous size is a vastly different job from pounding a Hub pavement on a cold day with an east wind blowing.

THE big blizzard scheduled for Wednesday failed to materialize, the only thing which showed up being a drop in temperature to about zero, only what is to be expected at this time of the year. But then, who'd expect the weather man to guess within a thousand miles of correct for New England weather?

Will Be of Interest to All.

The Men's League of the Congregational church has secured for its next speaker Rev. Rufus W. Stimson, director of Smith Agricultural School at Northampton, who is now and for some months has been engaged as special agent of the State Board of Education in making a study of agricultural education. He will speak on the 25th, on the subject, "Education, old and new." This topic is of great interest at this present time, and Mr. Stimson's work especially fits him to speak on it in an interesting and instructive manner. The meeting will be an open one, and all men interested in the subject are cordially invited to attend. Mr. Stimson is a native of Palmer, is well known here, and his personality and subject should draw a large number to hear him.

PALMER NEWS.

New Money Orders in Use.

Palmer Office Begins With Them Monday. Vast Improvement.

The Palmer post office, in common with all the offices of the country which had not received a supply previous, began on Monday the use of the new money order issued by the department. The new form makes less work for the post office officials and there is no red tape in transmission or payment. By the former method a letter of "advice" was forwarded to the post office at which an order was to be paid; until it arrived the order could not be cashed. The new order is after the manner of a check, and is the only paper used except the application form, which is the same as formerly. On one end on the new order is a small receipt stub, which the sender tears off and keeps, this being his receipt for the money. The main part is forwarded to the recipient, and on presentation at the post office is cashed. A line through the center permits the paying post master to tear off one end to keep as his receipt, the other half being forwarded to Washington with his accounts. The new form is a vast improvement over the old.

George Steinson of Brimfield, charged with neglect on an animal, was found guilty and fined $100; lacking funds he was remanded to jail for three months The testimony was that Steinson permitted a cow with a broken leg to remain in the barn until the break became infested with maggots. Mr. Steinson conducted his own defense, as he did in the lower court

A Famous Vine.

In the Cumberland Lodge portion of the royal gardens at Windsor there is a vine, known all over England as the Cumberland Lodge vine, which is a shoot of a still older vine which grows at Hampton Court, but the shoot has far outdistanced its parent in dimensions and productiveness. In England grapes are generally grown under glass, and the Cumberland Lodge vine has a great glass structure, 120 feet long by 20 wide, all to itself. Growing with astonishing luxuriance, the vine spreads itself over a roof area of 2,400 square feet and bears annually a crop of approximately a thousand huge bunches of the finest flavored grapes. These grapes are frequently found on the royal table, and the subject who is presented with a basket of them considers himself highly favored. The shoot from which the great vine has grown was planted in 1775.

Boston Letter

BOSTON, Jan. 4, 1911.

For the first time in the Legislature, the session has been more strenuous than any living man can recall, in all probability. What occurred back in the Free Soil days is a matter out of the minds of any men at present available, but no man who is around the state house at present ever saw the like of this day at the beginning, yet it might easily have been much worse. The excitement never came near the high water mark of the passage of the Boston police commission bill, which exceeded anything remembered here, and that continued for three days. There was some excitement for an hour or two when James J. Myers was speaker and McInerney of Boston, who is in the House this year, tried to stump Myers to put him ont by force, but in vain. When James H. Mellen had his encounter with Speaker Bates and was suspended from the privileges of the floor, there was excitement. To-day everything was done in good order. Men kept their tempers and there was nothing worse than the strain of the excitement and the supense till the votes were taken.

It all came about over the question whether Speaker Walker should be re-elected, or whether enough Republicans would vote against Walker to elect Lomasney, the Democrat who was nominated at last night's Democratic caucus to be the candidate of the party. The House Republicans held their caucus this forenoon, nominated all the old officials of last year and laid down their plans for making Walker's election snre. The entire scheme was laid ont in plain sight and explained. It is a wonder that no Democrat got on to it, for the caucus was open. Reporters were present, and any Republican might have come and talked it over with some Democrat. In the long run the result would have been the same as it was, but the nub of the strategy of the Republicans was to have the House rules of last year adopted immediately. That was for the sake of being able to secure a roll call on request of 30 members. Otherwise the House would have been under the rules of general parliamentary practice and a majority vote would have been necessary to a roll call. The Republicans had become so much convinced that some of their party would vote for Lomasney on a secret ballot that they did not dare risk Walker's election. The matter was carefully considered and plans made in advance. If a roll call could be had and every Republican forced to vote openly, then he would presumably not dare to vote for Lomasney. It was therefore Democratic policy to have a secret ballot, the same as before. It was Republican policy to have a roll call.

At the critical moment in the session this forenoon, a few minutes after the rontine was under way, Mr. Reidy of Boston, Democrat, was on the floor with a motion to offer. Indeed, he was so prompt that he once tried to get the floor before Gov. Draper had withdrawn from swearing in the members. Bnt he had to wait a bit for courtesy's sake. Then at the decisive moment, Mr. Underhill of Somerville, the House leader in the matter, whose seat was three rows nearer the chair than Reidy's, rushed to the chair with his motion and got it in first. It was for election of speaker by roll call. As soon as it was stated, Mr. Lomasney got the floor on his point of order that under the rnle for voting when there was a vacancy in the speakership, that vacancy must be filled by ballot. The chair, Mr. Eames of Lawrence, being coached constantly by Clerk Kimball at his elbow, rnled that the point of order was not well taken. Lamasney appealed and there followed a long debate. Bnt it ended in the chair's being sustained by a practically party vote Then they got the roll call on speaker and Walker had 130 to 99 for Lomasney and four for Mr. McCarthy of Marlboro. These four would not vote for Lomasney for speaker. There were also five Democrats who voted for Walker,—Messrs. Ahearn of Framingham, Bartlett of Plymouth, Dwyer of Weymouth, Parker of Woburn and Pope of Leominster. That was really the size of the Democratic protest against the election of a Boston Democrat of the Lomasney kind. That was the end of the fight. For the remainder of the day things ran as usnal It does not appear that this beginning has left any bad blood and it does mean that the Democrats are going to be factions in their voting because they have such a large minority.

It is to be noted that Speaker Walker, in the Republican caucus this forenoon, insisted upon the liberal ground which he has taken in recent years. He deprecated drawing party lines npon measures where party principles are not directly involved. It would delay legislation, he said, and produce unfortunate consequences. There will be some measures on which party lines must be drawn necessarily in order to represent the constituents, but on all matters where it is possible to be non-partisan, he urged them to be so. They kept very still when he said it.

The other matter of large interest here to-day has been the senatorship. Republican members are still under the influence of the tremendous enthusiasm of Senator Lodge's reception at Symphony Hall last night. That spectacle of cheering and waving flags has probably not been surpassed in honor of any public man since the present politicians can remember. It was overpowering for the average member. Here to-day, there have been found two distinct impressions on the part of Republicans who heard the memorable address. Some of them take it at its full face value. They credit the senator with absolute sincerity, frankness and truthfulness in every word, in the main and in detail. They think that the speech will help very much. But there are other Republicans, and not in the list of the nominal anti-Lodge men, who are doubtful. They say that there was nothing in the speech to satisfy the men who are not satisfied now. There are omissions which need to be explained and hence it is evident that the senator did not carry all of his own party with him There has been too much going on here to-day for much to be said about the senatorship. It is said on some sides that there will be continued uncertainty till the voting begins January 17 Senator Lodge's private secretary is evidently keeping close watch of the Legislatnre. From some things which are known to be in progress it is quite probable that there will be a strong Republican candidate in sight before the voting begins, fully up to the size of the office and who will be a formidable anti-Lodge candidate. Strong efforts have been made to get him ont of Lodge's way, bnt he has refused thns far.

It has been impossible, in the rnsh, to make any study of the committees, which were announced late this afternoon. Bnt there is extra interest in the committee on the liquor law, since the proposed repeal of the bar and bottle bill is said to be the real motive behind Lomasny's candidacy for speaker. He is said to have the support of the liquor men because they wanted a more favorable committee than they believed that Walker would give them. The Senate members are Nash of Plymouth, Hoar of Middlesex and Grainger of Suffolk. The last two are new men and nnknown on this point. Nash is against liquor. In the House, Mr. Doyle of New Bedford, who was second to Saunders of Clinton, and who expects to present the repeal bill this year, was the ranking man, in view of Saunders' transfer to be chairman of House judiciary. But Speaker Walker has left Doyle second and has put first Mr. Bothfeld of Newton, who will be an anti-liquor man. Two of the other House members are presumably temperance men. Two others were on the committee last year and are on the liquor side. Others are new men who have not been placed. So it is unknown what the opinion of the committee is from the start.

The Brooch

By DONALD MACKNIGHT

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

During the war between King Charles I. and his parliament two English families, the Vincents and the Traverses, were living on adjacent estates. Young Egbert Travers and Angela Vincent played together as children; then when the young Cavaliers were leaving their homes to support the king and Egbert marched to the war the parting made them sensible of the fact that they were lovers. Over the hedge that separated the two estates they plighted their troth, and the young lover dashed away thinking of the day when, the Puritans having been made to know their place and the authority of the king having been fully re-established, he would return to take up the pleasant life he had thus far led, made far happier by his union with Angela.

But, as under the struggle of 1861 to 1865 in America there lay, unrecognized at the time, the principle of civil liberty, so under that in England there was a principle of constitutional government. Travers was fighting for the king as an uncontrolled power, while his enemies were fighting for the king as he is today—a mere representative head of the government. The latter cause triumphed, the king was beheaded, and those who supported him, many of them deprived of their estates, found themselves without the means of subsistence.

Sir Edward Vincent, who espoused the parliamentary cause, had fallen at the battle of Marston Moor, and his wife had died during the struggle, leaving the Lady Angela an orphan. The Travers estate was confiscated, and Egbert Travers, instead of returning to his home, as he had anticipated when he set out to fight for the king, found himself penniless and without a roof over his head. An aunt of Angela's had taken what funds she could get together and gone to Holland. Angela decided to join this her only relative and remain with her till England became more settled under the sway of the parliament and the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell.

One evening when traveling toward the coast Angela heard a shot, the conch came to a stop, and a man on horseback appeared at the window, thrusting in one of those cumbersome implements with a flintlock which in those days they considered a pistol. A yellow strip of cloud reflecting the light of the setting sun shone on the man's face, while the features of the lady were concealed from him.

"I'll trouble you for your purse," he said.

The lady handed him a silk purse well filled.

"And now your jewels."

She removed a brooch from her throat and gave him that too. This seemed to satisfy him, and he told the coachman to drive on, but immediately stopped him to ask:

"Are you for the king or the parliament?"

"My father died for the parliament; my betrothed fought for the king!"

The highwayman straightway thrust his hand into his pocket, took out the purse and tossed it back into the carriage.

"It's only the cursed Roundheads," he said, "whom we force to give us food while we wait for the return of King Charlie."

He was feeling for the brooch when she stopped him.

"Keep it," she said, "for a remembrance. If I mistake not, you are one of those young men who, having lost your possessions in defense of the king, have taken to the road. The day may come when we shall meet again. If so, the brooch may be a means of recognition."

The highwayman lifted his hat, thanked the lady for her gift and signified to the coachman that he might drive on.

* * * * * * * *

King Charles II. was entering London amid great rejoicings. A carriage was standing by the curb in the street where the royal procession must pass. When the king had gone by a young man in the cavalcade, seeing a face in the carriage, reined in, crying:

"Angela!"

"The last time you were at my carriage window it was for a very different purpose," she replied.

"What mean you, sweetheart?"

"Sweetheart, indeed! You robbed me."

"What, of your heart?"

"Of my heart, forsooth! Of my purse."

The young man looked confused. "We must needs do something after Naseby," he said, hanglug his head, "but I surely never robbed you, Angela."

"You have a brooch a lady gave you?"

"A brooch! Yes, I have a brooch."

"I gave it to you, saying that some day it might be a means of recognition."

"Come," she said, "mayhap you have been wearing it next your heart, thinking it to be the gift of some fair dame other than your betrothed."

"Indeed I have kept it near my heart!" he admitted. "Here it is." And he produced it.

The estates of these young people came again into their possession. Among the descendants of Egbert and Angela is the brooch of which Angela was robbed.

Mixing His Dates.

There is a story of a man who was so transported with joy as he stood up at the altar rail to be married that his thoughts reverted to a day when he stood up at the prisoner's bar in a court of justice to plead "guilty" or "not guilty" to a criminal charge. So powerfully did that, the most painful event of his life, obtrude itself upon his mind that when the clergyman put the question, "Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife?" and so on, the poor distracted bridegroom answered with startling distinctness, "Not guilty, so help me!"—From Tuckerman's "Personal Recollections."

A Stubborn Opening.

The head of the household was going through her husband's pockets the next morning.

"What kept you out so late last night?" she suddenly demanded.

"It was the opening of the campaign, my dear," the lesser half replied.

"Well, it didn't take three corkscrews to open it, did it?"

A Riot of Ink.

Canon Nicholl used to tell how on one occasion he had visited the famous house of the Thrales in that suburb of London where Dr. Johnson was at home. "Johnson," said the canon in recalling his visit, "had occupied two rooms, and these were left as he last used them. The sight was an extraordinary one, for ink was splashed all over the floor and even on the walls. It was one of the doctor's habits to dip his pen in ink and then shake it."

"Pa, what is commendable pride?" "Our own, my son."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Pater—"Can you give my daughter the comforts to which she has been accustomed?" Suitor—"Yes, sir. I've breakfasted at your house, and I'm certain that I can complain about the coffee, read the paper, demand the discharge of the cook and announce that I'll dine at the club."—Exchange.

A seven-years-old boy while eating dinner complained of not being able to chew his food because of trouble with his teeth. "First, I chew on one side, and it hurts; then I try the other side, and that hurts, too," cried the youngster. "How would you like to have your teeth in your stomach, like the lobster?" interrogated his mother. "Then you could swallow your food without chewing it." "Not much?" he cried: "Think of the trouble you'd have in getting your teeth pulled!"—Breeze.

HANDICAPPED.

This is the Case With Many Palmer People.

Too many Palmer citizens are handicapped with a bad back. The unceasing pain causes constant misery, making work a burden and stooping or lifting an impossibility. The backaches at night, preventing refreshing rest and in the morning is stiff and lame. Plasters and liniments may give relief but cannot reach the cause. To eliminate the pains and aches you must cure the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and cure them permanently. Can you doubt Palmer evidence?

W. E. Griffin, Park St., Palmer, Mass., says: "I injured my back about two years ago and after that had considerable trouble from my kidneys. There was a dull pain in my back and it was often impossible for me to get about at all. The kidney secretions were too frequent in passage at times, then again scanty and my health was much run down. I finally saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and procured a box from Lynde and Gould's Drug Store. This remedy gave me prompt relief and before long all symptoms of kidney trouble had disappeared."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

How It Feels to Be Run Over.

"When I was run over," writes a correspondent, "I had not seen the car approaching. The first thing I knew was that I was on the ground, kicking upward with my legs in an effort to get from under the car. Then I felt a wheel going over my chest, which bent as it passed over. In the intervening second or two I went through several minutes' worth of feelings. I had the sensations of astonishment at being on the ground, of wanting to roll aside and away, of bracing myself—and my chest especially—stiff to resist something, whatever it might be, while a lightning flash of fear was dimly there and a subconscious query, 'What on earth next?' Yet it was hardly fear, because there was no time for such a durable sensation. It was rather a sense of being suddenly confronted with a grave reality, of doubtful, obscurely terrible import."—London Chronicle.

Origin of Coal.

Coal is of vegetable origin. When vegetable matter accumulates under water it undergoes a slow process of decomposition, giving off its nitrogen, hydrogen, oxygen and some carbon, the result of which if carried far enough is the formation of a mass of carbon. Peat, found often in swampy tracts, is the first stage in the coal forming process, and the further stages are formed by the burial of these vegetable deposits under great loads of sediment, where they become subject to pressure and sometimes to heat. This effects a series of changes, consolidation and loss of oxygen and gives a series of products whose nature depends on the degree to which the original vegetable matter has been changed. The products are known as lignite, bituminous coal and anthracite coal.

Making a Major.

John Esten Cooke, who went into the war as an enlisted man in a Richmond battery, was soon afterward appointed an officer on the staff of General J. E. B. Stuart. On Stuart's staff, Mr. George Cary Eggleston says in "Recollections of a Varied Life," he distinguished himself by a certain laughing nonchalance under fire and by his eager readiness to undertake Stuart's most perilous missions.

It was in recognition of some specially daring service of that kind that Stuart gave him his promotion. The delightful way in which the great boyish southerner did it is best told in Mr. Eggleston's own words.

"You're about my size, Cooke," Stuart said, "but you're not so broad in the chest."

"Yes, I am," answered Cooke.

"Let's see if you are," said Stuart, taking off his coat as if for a boxing match. "Try that on."

Cooke donned the coat with its three stars on the collar and found it a fit.

"Cut off two of the stars," Stuart commanded, "and wear the coat to Richmond. Tell the people in the war department to make you a major and send you back to me in a hurry. I'll need you tomorrow."

Wanted It Well Hidden.

Little Bobby was too polite to say he wanted a big piece of the turkey, but he said he would like a piece of the chest, where the wishbone was, only he didn't want to find the wishbone too quick.—Browning's Magazine.

It Was This Way.

"I suppose the father gave the bride away."

"Not exactly. He gave a million away and threw her in."—Philadelphia Ledger.

FINE SITE FOR TOWN HALL.

Suggestion That Town Buy Now And Hold the Property.

CAN BE UTILIZED AS A PLAYGROUND.

Lack of Public Hall Facilities Revives Public Building Proposition Made Before.

The filling of the opera house "jam full" at the Knights of Columbus minstrels last week—when every seat was filled and there were many standing, besides hundreds who wished to attend but were prevented because they could not get in—served to call attention once more to the fact that there is not in the town a room of sufficient size to conveniently accommodate large gatherings of any sort

The matter has been much discussed during the week, and in searching for a remedy there are a number who have suggested again the advisability in the near future of the town providing itself with a town hall—a building where can be housed all the town officials, where a lockup may be provided, and where a hall sufficiently large to hold town meetings in may be installed. This is not a new suggestion; it has been brought up at various times in the last decade, but always with a scarcity of available sites. Those who are most interested in the matter at the present time have a site in mind however which they deem most suitable It is the lot on Walnut street formerly occupied by the large Marcy barn, burned about two years ago. This lot is large enough for the purpose suggested, and has the advantage of being located close to the electric car line. The suggestion is that the town acquire the property now and hold it until it is decided to place a town building thereon In the meantime it could be cleared up and utilized as a playground for many of the younger children of the village, thus solving in a measure the problem of the playground committee.

There appears to be a growing feeling that the time is rapidly approaching when the town of Palmer should maintain the dignity of the position which it has attained in population, valuation and the amount of town business done, by housing its officials in a building suitable for their needs This would probably mean the combining of some of the offices under one head, but this would be a distinct advantage in many ways, and is sure to come some day. The entire suggestion is one which is worth more than a passing thought, in any event.

Swindler Caught at Ware.

Was Collecting Delivery Charges on Fake Express Packages.

A man giving his name as Louis Cote and claiming at first a residence in Spencer and later in Manchester, N. H., was arrested in Ware last Friday afternoon by Officer Fitzgerald, on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences.

The man arrived in Ware on Thursday night, going to the Hampshire House, where he gave the name of P. H Herbert of Boston, representing himself as a salesman for a wall paper concern. The next day he called at the house of Mrs. Annie Dorian on Pleasant street, to whom he stated that he was in the employ of the American express company, telling her a story about a box that had gone to Boston after two unsuccessful attempts had been made to deliver it, and that 85 cents was needed to get it back. The money was paid to him and was promised back on the arrival of the box. A receipt was given After his departure Mrs. Dorian became suspicions, and upon calling up the office of the express company on the phone, found the man to be an imposter, and immediately notified the police.

He was brought into the district court Saturday morning and it was found that he had visited several French families, and obtained 85 cent amounts. He pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing 85 cents from Mrs. Dorian and was ordered to recognize in $1000 to appear before the superior court in Northampton in June and as he could not furnish bail he was committed to jail until that time.

Cote could given no information regarding himself or as to his relatives, and appeared to have but little knowledge of Manchester, which he claimed as his home As he seemed somewhat acquainted in and around Springfield, Chief B. W. Buckley hopes to find out before June just who the man is.

Miss Munroe and Miss Bates returned this week to the MacDuffie school at Springfield, where they are taking a course.

A serious fire was narrowly averted at Foskett's Mills last Friday morning Benjamin E. Hastings, who is employed in the grist mill, discovered a large pile of sawdust in the cellar to be on fire, the flames creeping up to the dry sawdust on top. By prompt use of water from the pond, Mr. Hastings extinguished the flames before the building caught.

The officers of the Grange have been installed as follows: Master, Albert R. Brown; overseer, Orlo Parker; lecturer, Mrs. Dwight Barnes; steward, Everett Stowell; assistant steward, Dwight Barnes; chaplain, Orus E. Parker; treasurer, Clarence B. Two Town Officials Decline Re-election.

Selectman Upham and Town Treasurer Taylor Announce Their Unwillingness to Serve Longer in Present Capacities.

It will be of interest to the voters of Palmer to learn that two members of the town's official family will under no circumstances be candidates for re-election at the annual meeting in March. They are Selectman Frederick A. Upham and Treasurer Edward B. Taylor, both of whom are serving their freshman term in the position.

Frederick A. Upham.

Edward B. Taylor.

Mr. Upham makes his decision because of personal reasons, and announces that he cannot be induced to change his mind. In this there will be genuine regret in many directions, as he is believed to be a careful, painstaking, conscientious official, giving generously of his time and energies to the exacting duties of the position. On the other hand there will be regret at the loss of opportunity to "get back" at him, as had been planned in certain quarters provided he was again a candidate. Mr. Upham has served four years as a member of the school committee, and the last year has been chairman of the board of selectmen. He feels now that he does not care to longer assume the cares of public life.

Edward B. Taylor, who was appointed last spring to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Joseph F. Holbrook, and who has held the office for several months, declines a re-election for the reason that he has not sufficient time to give to the work necessary. The town has numerous boards, each of which has its own cash account and draws its own orders; this makes a vast amount of bookkeeping, with the receipts from many sources to be credited to the several departments. The whole makes an amount of work which is little appreciated by the average citizen Mr. Taylor says he little guessed the extent of the work when he was appointed treasurer without solicitation on his part, and that he has not time for the task.

Doings of the Legislature.

The U. S. Senatorship Situation—New Administration at Work—Coming Agricultural Schools' Report—New Plan for Electing Convention Delegates—Direct Nomination Bill Coming?

BOSTON, Jan. 11, 1911.

Caucuses, not conferences, seem to be the fixed order of the day for the preliminaries on the senatorship. Republican leaders here yesterday were saying that their meeting would be a conference, not a caucus Not till the word came from Washington, of course from Senator Lodge, though his name is not given, did they decide to make it a straight party caucus. That seems to indicate that the Lodge men believe that they have their men sufficiently well in hand to put on party discipline. It was said here yesterday by the Republican leader who stands next to Speaker Walker that there were men who would be more likely to vote for Lodge after the first ballot then they would on the first ballot, who might be brought into line quickly, if they were given one opportunity to vote according to what they felt to be the sentiment of their constituents and then they would vote according to what they believed to be the sentiment of the majority of the Republican members of the Legislature He said that they had the anti-Lodge poison in them and that an opportunity to speak out in a conference and to vote once or twice for some other candidate would enable them "to get it out of their systems" and then they would be straight Lodge men. There are signs that Lodge will have some Democratic votes and also that there has been some measure of success in putting on the party screws to make votes for him. There is also good reason to say that there has been a disgraceful hold-up attempt made by an anti-Lodge man toward an outside anti-Lodge man, but it failed. If the mean side of the contest is in sight six days before the first ballot is taken,—and each side is suspected of having its tainted man,—what will it be when the actual collision of forces occurs? Some men had better be very careful, for their own sakes, if they have no regard for the honor of Massachusetts.

It is utterly impossible for the claims for each side to be true, though two or three weeks ago there was such substantial agreement that the truth was evidently about as represented. That was when the Lodge side counted 28 Republicans who had not been secured for the senator and the anti-Lodge men were claiming about 30 To-day, the Ames claim is that 30 Republicans will stand up and vote for Ames. Lodge men are predicting his election next Tuesday by each branch, before they meet in joint convention. Of course these statements are wide apart, unless the Lodge men have secured a large block of Democratic votes, which is not yet probable, for there are only two or three who are believed to be Lodge men. Messrs. Newton and McInerney of Boston are now said to be sure for Lodge among the Democrats, but that Lomasney will not. Former Representative O'Brien of Lawrence and Former Representative Holt of Methuen have both been in the House corridors working for Ames, and the Congressman himself has headquarters in the Parker House, where he has received quite a number of Republicans and Democrats. Some men are still uncommitted, and in the case of one of the leading Republicans of the House there is a strong indignation at the way he had been turned over to Lodge by two local politicians who would seem to control his vote.

The new administration is fully installed in the executive department. For the first time visitors to the office of the private secretary see a woman stenographer and typewriter there. She has been with Gov. Foss for years, ever since he organized the New England Reciprocity League in the Board of Trade building with William E. Brigham, now Washington correspondent of the Boston Transcript, as secretary and this woman as typewriter; she has been with him ever since. During the late years she has been in his Oliver street office The governor himself is promptly on hand at the beginning of office hours. Private Secretary Holman is up to his ears in papers, so busy that inside has to wait for hours, and the ante-room is filled with many men desirous of seeing the governor. They are not at all the same set who have been familiar during the Draper administration, but include George Fred Williams, Grenville S. Macfarland, and others, with E. Gerry Brown of Brockton, who have been active on the side of radically progressive measures for the mass of the people. It is a great difference, and there will surely be much popular interest in seeing how far the new administration goes in the radical direction. The question is whether the natural conservation of Foss, as a wealthy business man, will hold him back from the measures favored by those who do not have so much of a property stake to hold them back. On the part of the Legislature, there has been no occasion yet for any friction between the members and the executive. Private expressions indicate that some members will be very ready to put the governor in a hole, while the counsel of Speaker Walker is not to play politics with him just for the sake of putting him in a hole.

It does not yet appear that Speaker Walker will get many votes on the first ballot Probably there are five or six who will take that stand for him at the outset. But he does not give any encouragement to the move, and is expected to make the motion in caucus that Lodge be the nominee. Mention is made here to-day of the fate which overtook Senator Parsons of Franklin in 1899, after he had refused to vote for Lodge's re-election, and his fate is still held up as a warning to members not to refuse to vote for the senator if they have any regard for their political lives.

It is to be expected that there will be much interest in the report of the board of education upon agricultural vocational schools. Mention of the various towns all over the state will spur public interest. The long mention of the facilities of Palmer as a place with exceptional advantages will surely please the people of that vicinity. Mention of Petersham will appeal to the northern part of Worcester county, while the opinion that the city of Worcester does not need such a school will disappoint those who hoped that there would be some practical outcome of the action taken by the late James H. Mellen of Worcester, when he was a member of the House last session. Such a thorough discussion has not been put out for a long time by the state board of education. This is one of the results of the two new deputy commissioners of education, Messrs Orr and Prosser, who have been following the matter with great care The proposed departure is radical for the state to take, and it shows how agricultural conditions are receiving more attention than ever.

Senator Hoar of Middlesex, the youngest man who was ever elected to the Massachusetts Senate, is active politically, though he is one of the committee on agriculture and is a lawyer by profession. He proposes, as long as the delegate system in conventions prevails, to reform it by having delegates accompanied by alternates, or at least have alternates chosen. This would prevent the scandal of a delegate's selling his credential on the pretext that he could not attend the convention, for, if he did not go, the alternate would be entitled to the ticket, and only as both could not go would the buyer of credentials find a field for activity.

Speaker Walker is credited with a purpose to put in a bill for direct nominations all over the state, following up the effort which he led successfully last year, though it was not at first at all indorsed by the Republican state committee. In these matters, according to Chairman Hatfield of the Republican state committee, it is perfectly proper for the committee to take a hand actively, for the issue is one of political management, and that is right in line with the business of state political committees For himself, he says, he has no objection to direct primaries, provided that some way can be found to prevent Democrats from helping to nominate weak Republicans and thus making it easy for the Democrats to win.

Doubtless there will be wide disappointment over the failure of the commission on workingmen's compensation for injuries to make a full report this year. They have put in a partial report to-day. They are not satisfied with their tentative report and want another year for considering the matter. LANDON

DANGEROUS WIRE CONDITION

Belief That Electric Conductors Are a Menace.

POLES AND WIRES OLD AND WEAK.

Sagging Wires Liable to Create Crosses From Which Serious Results May Follow.

The ringing of the fire alarm at various times during the past months by crossed wires during storms, and the cutting out of a portion of the electric lights for a time last week from the same cause, has started an inquiry as to the reason for these occurrences and the likelihood of their repetition, with a question as to possible results from crossed electric wires of various sorts. A little investigation has brought to light a condition which is believed to be fraught with considerable danger.

There are many places in the town where the electric light and telephone wires are carried on the same poles, in addition to the fire alarm wires; sometimes the telephone wires are uppermost and sometimes the light wires. The telephone people get theirs at the bottom wherever possible, to avoid danger to workmen in passing through the light wires to make repairs to their lines. There are almost countless other places where the wires cross each other in the air. The bulk of the poles—and there are hundreds of them—belong to the electric company, and were set 16 and 15 years ago. The crossarms are the ones originally placed on the poles, and the wire is that originally installed The crossarms have weakened with age and rotted at the fastenings, and it is not an unknown occurrence for them to break under the load of an ice storm or during heavy rains or winds, allowing the wires to sag or drop. The insulation on the wire is gone in many places, owing to long exposure. These wires, carrying a high electric current, coming in contact with wires of other kinds, are sure to cause trouble. In case the cross happens to be with another electric light wire a section of the town is without lights until the trouble is located and remedied. If the contact is with a telephone wire a telephone line is burned out. If these were all that might be expected there would be little cause for apprehension, for a little inconvenience for a short time would be the most that could happen. But it is well known that crosses of electric current wires with wires of other sorts may cause fires, and if crossed with telephone wires there is a possibility of death to anyone who attempts to use the phone at such a time.

There is a feeling that the poles and equipment installed so many years ago should be given a thorough inspection and overhauling in the interests of safety to property and lives, before serious damage compels the attention which should be given before.

WARREN.

Court Camelot Instituted.

In conferring the pilgrim degree Friday Miss Fostina Kenney acted as her aid and Miss Alice Walker as marshal. The regalia of the pilgrims is a blue sash with a white Maltese cross upon it. The order is the female counterpart of the Knights of King Arthur. At a subsequent meeting officers will be chosen from those initiated who were: Miss Ruth Warfield, Miss Mytie Dodge, Miss Millie Laflin, Miss Leda Klebart, Miss Hazel Davis, Miss Reba Kimmell, Miss Marjorie Chase, Miss Mae Converse, Miss Esther Hosley, Miss Esther Root, Miss Catherine Robertson, Miss Grace Laflin, Miss Dora Hathaway, Miss Susie Covell, Miss Mabel Shepard, Miss Elizabeth S. PALMER NEWS.

To Repeat Minstrel Show.

K. of C. Men to Black Up Again For Benefit of District Nurse Fund.

The members of the Knights of Columbus, who gave such a successful minstrel show last week, will repeat the performance in the opera house next Wednesday evening under the auspices of the association for district nursing. New "gags" and some new music will be introduced, otherwise the program will be the same as that given last week. The performance cannot, by reason of the constitution of the Knights, be given under the auspices of that organization, but the members have expressed a readiness to give it as individuals for the benefit of the district nursing fund, a most worthy object. The opera house was not nearly large enough to hold those who wished to attend last week, and many were disappointed in securing tickets, so that a generous audience and a wide margin of profit is expected next Wednesday. Tickets are now being sold, and these may be exchanged at the Bay State Drug Store next Monday morning at 9 o'clock for reserved seat checks A large number of tickets have already been sold.

Business Club Officers.

Entire New List Elected At Annual Meeting Wednesday Evening.

The Palmer Business and Social Club held its annual meeting Wednesday evening and adjourned with an entirely new list of officers with one exception, that of secretary. There has been a difference of opinion among the members of late concerning the question of refurnishing the club rooms, and the action—or lack of action—of the house committee, although the criticism of the latter was on matters over which it had no control, but the action Wednesday evening was in the nature of a surprise to most of those present. The new officers are: President, Dr. G. A. Moore; vice presidents, H. W Holbrook and L J. Brainerd; secretary, H. R. Paine; treasurer, Rufus Flynt; trustees, R. B. Francis, T. J. Moran, C. I Whitcomb, A. W. Holbrook; election committee, F. N. Carpenter, T. J. Clifford, W. L Shaw, J. F. Foley, James Summers, R. E. Cummings. The trustees will meet to-morrow evening to appoint a house committee.

Death of Miss Emily C. Graves.

Miss Emily C. Graves, 54, died in the Wesson Memorial hospital in Springfield Sunday afternoon of heart failure. Miss Graves was taken to the hospital December 17th suffering from a fractured hip, as the result of a fall She was apparently recovering and her death came very suddenly.

Miss Graves was the daughter of the late Joshua and Amanda Calkins Graves, and was born June 6, 1856, on Baptist Hill, on the homestead where her family had lived for five generations. She was educated in the schools of the town, and later attended Hitchcock Academy, from which she was graduated in 1876, valedictorian of her class. She taught for nine years in the public schools of Palmer and Monson. While teaching in Three Rivers in 1885 she was stricken with myelitis, ever afterward being a cripple and was obliged to walk with the aid of crutches. She continued work as bookkeeper for Shaw Bros. at Three Rivers and in Worcester for a period of three years.

She was a member of the First Baptist church in Three Rivers. She is survived by two brothers, Deacon Henry and Daniel Graves of Three Rivers, and two sisters, Mrs. D. E. Tenney, who lives on the Wilbraham road, and Miss Esther Graves, who lives on the old homestead.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 2 from Phillips' undertaking rooms, Rev. C. W. Williams officiating. Mrs. C. W. Williams sang two selections. The bearers were Daniel Graves, D. E. Tenney, George R. and Louis Calkins. Burial was in the Thorndike cemetery.

Meeting of the Historical Society.

A meeting of the Historical Society was held Tuesday evening in the vestry of the Congregational church. Mr. R. C. Newell of Three Rivers gave an illustrated talk on the development of the cotton industry in this country, with valuable statistics of its production in other countries as compared with our own which leads the world in amount. The numerous illustrations gave a good idea of the cotton fields of the South, both in growth and harvesting, also the various insect pests which destroy many million dollars' worth of the crop annually. The homes of the colored laborers, as well as of the poor whites, were also shown and described. The ancient looms were described and compared with the present in use in Three Rivers of such wonderful design and execution as to challenge belief were they not in daily evidence. The subject and the illustrations were a revelation to nearly all present, showing how the genius of man has supplied the demands of this wonderful age. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the speaker for his able and interesting presentation of the subject.

Firemen's Ball Next Week.

The annual ball of the firemen—the fifteenth in the history of the department—will be held in the opera house on Friday evening of next week. There will be a change in the music this year, the Worcester Infantry Orchestra having been selected. The usual concert will be given from 8 until 9, followed by the dancing program. Ball tickets, admitting gentleman and two ladies, will be $1; concert tickets will be 25 cents. Refreshments will be served in the hall, and clothing will be checked by responsible parties. Special cars will be run to the villages and Monson after the hall. The general floor director will be J E. Learned, assisted by N. J. Comfort and F. H. Sumner; committee of arrangements, F. J. The Clever Shoe Clerk.

At the cost of considerable time and labor one high grade shoe house is bound to protect its goods. On a rainy day a woman wearing wet shoes went in to buy rubbers. The clerk measured the width and length of her shoes, removed them and brought a new pair of the same size to try on. Visions of a depleted pocketbook caused her to exclaim, "But I don't want new shoes, only rubbers!"

"I understand," said the clerk. "I am only slipping these shoes on to fit the rubbers over. It soils the inside of a rubber to slip it on over a wet shoe. Then if it doesn't fit and the customer doesn't take it it is spoiled for the next customer."

"And the outcome of that experience was," said the woman, "that I bought the shoes as well as the rubbers and had them sent home C. O. D. Maybe that was what he was working for all the time."—New York Sun.

Oddest of Queer Fishes.

A queer fish that does not swim is the "sargasso fish," known to sailors as the "frogfish." It lives in that vast mass of floating gulfweed called the Sargasso sea, in mid-Atlantic.

Its pectoral fins are so modified and developed as to resemble arms, and it uses them for clinging to the weed. Very gaudily colored, it changes its hues to match the aquatic vegetation by which it is surrounded, and when the latter decays and turns brown it assumes a corresponding shade.

The fish lays its eggs in a jelly-like mass, which, absorbing a great quantity of water, becomes three times as big as the mother fish herself, assuming the form of a narrow raft three or four feet long and two to four inches wide.—New York World.

Millions of Lives

An Awful Toll Collected by Consumption. Many Unnecessary Deaths.

If people could only understand that systematic catarrh is an internal disease that external applications cannot cure, they would not need to be warned so often about this malady, which, when neglected, paves the way oftentimes for consumption, at the cost of millions of lives every year. Yet catarrh may be cured, if the right treatment is employed.

The only way to successfully treat catarrh is by employing a medicine which is absorbed and carried by the blood to all parts of the system, so that the mucous membrane or internal lining of the body is toned up and made capable of resisting the infection of consumption and other diseases.

We have a remedy prepared from the prescription of a physician who for thirty years studied and made catarrh a specialty, and whose record was a patient restored to health in every case where his treatment was followed as prescribed. That remedy is Rexall Mucu-Tone. We are so positive that it will completely overcome catarrh in all its various forms, whether acute or chronic, that we promise to return every penny paid us for the medicine in every case where it fails or for any reason does not satisfy the user.

We want you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our recommendation and guarantee. We are right here where you live, and you do not contract any obligation or risk when you try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our guarantee. We have Rexall Mucu-Tone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1 00. Very often the taking of one 50-cent bottle is sufficient to make a marked impression upon the case Of course in chronic cases a longer treatment is necessary. The average in such instances is three $1 00 bottles Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Palmer only at our store—The Rexall Store. Lynde & Gould, Palmer.

Offers to Refund Money if Dr. Howard's Specific Will Not Cure Any Case Of Constipation or Dyspepsia.

Lynde & Gould are seeking the worst case of dyspepsia or constipation in Palmer or vicinity to test Dr. Howard's new specific for the cure of those diseases.

In order to secure the quickest possible introduction Lynde & Gould will sell a regular fifty cent package of this medicine at half price, 25 cents.

This specific of Dr. Howard's will cure sick headache, dizzy feelings, constipation, dyspepsia and all forms of malaria and liver trouble. It does not simply give relief for a time; it makes permanent and complete cures

REVERSING AN ADAGE

By HARVEY DALTON

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Force is the basis of everything. Force keeps us moving—indeed, alive. And, strange to say, force is the basis of Christianity. Perhaps what I mean will be plainer when I have told my story.

I had been a clergyman of the Second Presbyterian church in our town for several years when I began to be a doubter. I first doubted the miracles. That's the way all skeptics begin, and they think that if the miracles were out of the way they could believe all the rest. It was hard to get up in the pulpit every Sunday and preach what I didn't believe myself. Finally I applied for a leave on the usual clergyman's ground—a bad throat—and went on a sea voyage.

The ship I sailed in was a tramp. I was told that they had had fine weather for three months. Some of them said they'd be glad to see a hurricane, they had got so tired of sunshine and light breezes. But the day after I got aboard the weather changed, and, sure enough, the hurricane they wanted broke on us furiously. We were three days fighting acas set going by wind traveling at the rate of a hundred miles an hour. We had everything battened down, but the waves pounded out the glass over the cabins and so much water poured into the hold that all hands—passengers and all—were called upon to man the pumps.

During all this never did a sailor pass me but he scowled at me, and occasionally they would gather in knots, talking and shooting malignant glances at me. I didn't know what it meant, and before I found out the wind died down. But it came up again, and we went through three more days of much the same kind of weather. When this second storm was over I was standing on the deck one afternoon looking at a rainbow which seemed to me a bow of promise when a number of sailors headed by an old salt with rings in his ears came up to me, and the old fellow said:

"Parson, we've come to the conclusion that you're bringing these storms on us, and we don't want no more of 'em. We're goin' to pitch you overboard."

Seeing a capstan bar near me, I seized it to use as a means of defense, but a man behind me was too quick for me, and I was held in a titanic grip. This gave the others a chance They closed and over I went.

The men continued to look over the side of the vessel to see what became of me, especially as that place was alive with sharks, and I had scarcely struck the surface when a big fellow gave a slow flap of his tail and floated toward me. I'm a good swimmer and had no difficulty in keeping on the surface. Besides, I had hung on to the capstan bar, which was enough to float me anyway. The shark came slowly up to me, turned on its side with a view to taking me in, opened wide its scissor jaws and—

Here the turning point of my story comes in. I put one end of the capstan bar on his lower jaw, and, just as the two started to get together, I wedged the other end in just back of his teeth on his upper jaw. And there he was.

I was floating about between the two rows of teeth, hanging on to the middle of the bar. Then when I was satisfied the shark could not bite I just floated out and up to the surface.

Nothing succeeds like success. The sailors who watched what I had done threw lines down to me and hauled me up again on deck.

The first thought that came into my head was the miracle I had most doubted—that of the prophet Jonah. I saw it in a different light than ever before. Hadn't I just been through a more remarkable occurrence? And how had I escaped? By the same way as I had been tossed overboard—force. I made up my mind to stop doubting and go to work. I saw that the sailors, after my experience with the shark, were afraid of me, and I resolved to profit by their fear. I proposed thereafter to preach the gospel peaceably when I could, forcibly when I must.

"Every man Jack of you," I thundered, "come aft to prayers!"

I led them to the after deck, not a man refusing to follow, and gave them half an hour's service. I established two services a day, and at every service I read them the story of the prophet Jonah, at the end asking them if any one of them disbelieved it. The first day one man said it was all a lie. I knocked him down. He got up, and I knocked him down again, and he kept getting up and I knocking him down, till at last he said, "I believe you, parson, and I reckon you're the man that lived three days in the whale's belly yourself."

Since then I have believed that force even in our calling is better than persuasion. At any rate, there are cases where persuasion won't work, but force will. And if there is any place where force will work better than persuasion it's among a ship's crew. I remained aboard that ship seven months, and I found the only way to induce the men to believe anything extraordinary was to hammer it into them. I thrashed a man into believing the story of Samson, two men for doubting the story of Joshua making the sun stand still and every man of the crew for ridiculing the falling of the walls of Jericho at the blowing of a ram's horn.

Just a few words more on the COFFEE situation

The very radical advances that we have previously reported have continued without any interruption and so rapidly that those not in close touch with the situation can hardly comprehend the extent of the change that has gone on.

Even those varieties which show the least advance are practically five cents a pound higher than the quotations of a few months back, and with all others the change has been considerably more than that.

We are fast coming to the point where our prices must come nearer to reflecting the situation than they have done, because, heretofore, while we had reserve stock available, we made only nominal changes to our trade, but now that the retailers of the country have awakened to a realization of the necessity of making substantial advances to the consumers, we shall feel somewhat freer to adjust our schedule accordingly, which, up to this time, we have not done, because, as between our trade and ourselves, we felt it was more proper for us to carry the burden than to have you do so.

Any thought that existing market conditions will only be temporary should be abandoned, for, without any question, we are in the midst of a period of protracted high prices on coffees, and you are not fair to yourself if you do not recognize the situation and adjust your prices accordingly. We beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
Chase & Sanborn.

MONSON'S FINE NEW SCHOOL BUILDING.

Opened For Inspection Yesterday. Will Be Used For School Purposes Next Monday. Modern In Every Respect.

The new schoolhouse on Mechanic street, which was opened for public inspection yesterday afternoon and evening, comes up to the expectations of the public and fulfills every requirement of the law regarding public school buildings. The building is situated on the land formerly known as the Thomas Stiles estate, the lot being purchased for $1500 from Mrs. Martha Stiles. There is ample room on the lot which is 165 by 260 feet for a generous playgroundin the rear of the building and there is a lawn in front of the building 75 feet deep.

The committee appointed at the annual town meeting last spring, at which it was voted to erect the building according to plans presented by the school committee at the cost of $14,000, consisted of Robert H. Cushman, Carlos M. Gage and Alvin E. Shaw. The plans were drawn by E. C. and G. C. Gardner of Springfield and the contract was given to G. W. Lyman of the same city. The W. N. Flynt Granite Company of this town were given the contract for the foundation, and J. P. Thackern of this town did the plumbing; the G. H. McClean Co. of Springfield put in the heating system, and the Parker-Hammer Electric Co. of Palmer installed the electric work.

The building is a two-story structure and is finely arranged and equipped inside. In the basement, which has a concrete floor, there are two low-pressure Boyington boilers for the heating system; in the other end of the basement are the sanitaries. On the first floor there is a vestibule 14 feet long and 7½ feet wide; this leads into the main corridor, 10 by 36 feet, and in the center of this two doors lead into the two cloak rooms 26 feet by 5 feet 4 inches. The two schoolrooms on this floor are 26 by 32 feet. The second floor is a duplicate of the ground floor with the exception of the vestibule, which is used as a principal's office.

The walls and ceilings of the building are covered with metal laths and plastered. The finish throughout the building is of North Carolina pine, and the floors are of rift-sawed pine. There are sanitary drinking fountains in each of the corridors. There is an excellent electric lighting equipment in the building. An electric fire gong connected with all the rooms is placed outside the building and in each of the corridors.

A fire standpipe has been put on each floor, which permits the attaching on of hose in case of fire. The building is very well lighted, each class room having six large windows on the west side, two on the east side, two on the north and two on the south side. The ventilation system is modern and up to all requirements. Forty-two seats have been placed in each of the four classrooms, providing for 168 children.

Miss Margaret T. Corcoran has been appointed principal of the building and will teach the fourth and fifth grades, which will occupy the south room on the second floor; Miss Gertrude Bennett will teach the first and second grades, which will occupy the south room on the first floor; Miss Annie C. Murphy will teach the third grade in the north room on the first floor; Miss Stella Hodge will teach the fifth and sixth grades and will occupy the north room on the second floor.

The new school will take all the children from the old No. 1 school, which has been condemned for several years, nearly all of the pupils attending school in the Memorial Hall and several from the overcrowded quarry school. School will begin in the new building next Monday. The only old building in use now is No. 8, and is hoped that in the near future a modern building will replace that.

Home Team Wins Again.

The Monson basketball team continued to add to its list of victories last night when the Enfield team was given the short end of a 61 to 14 score. The local team ran up 33 points before the Enfield team could score and the first half ended with the score, 35 to 2. In the second half the visitors braced up a trifle but with no need of exerting themselves. The Monson team chalked up 26 more points while Enfield was getting 12. Durkin played a fast game for Monson, as did Osborne and Giffin; for the visitors Downing starred. In the preliminary the Independents defeated the Academy Juniors 12 to 11. The line-up:

Monson.	Enfield
Faulkner, l f	r g, McBride
Giffin, r f	l g, Gage
Durkin, c	c, Kelliher
Moran, l g	r f, Downing
Osborne, r g	l f, Damon

Score, Monson 61, Enfield 14. Goals from floor, Durkin 9, Giffin 8, Faulkner 7, Osborne 4, Moran 2, McBride 2, Gage, Damon, Kelliher. Goals from fowls, Moran, Kelliher 2. Referee, Dunsford. Time, 20-minute halves. Attendance, 325.

Annual Report of St. Patrick's Church.

The annual financial report of St. Patrick's church was read in the church at each mass last Sunday. The church is in excellent financial condition. The total receipts for the year were $4352 39 and the expenditures, $3349 70. The pew rent amounted to $3102 50, and the Sunday offerings averaged $16.25, which shows that 325 of the parishioners contributed each Sunday. The remaining debt of $500 on the Sunday school building has been paid. At present the only debt of the church is the Chaffee house, the church, parsonage and Sunday school building being absolutely free from debt. There is a deposit to the credit of the parish of $3350. The annual printed report containing a report of all of the past year's work will be distributed Sunday.

Although Sampson was a tall husky creature, Weeks had no trouble getting the tap on him every time and also tossed in seven double counters. The forwards were somewhat slow in taking advantage of Week's ability to send the ball in their direction. Capt. Dunsford and Smith played a fine game and Leahy's passing in the second half was exceptional; Sibley excelled for the visitors.

The line up:

Monson Academy.	Aggie Sophomores
Kidd, Dewing, lf	rh, Huntington
Entwistle, Leahy, Taylor, rf	lf, Goodnough
Weeks, Squier, c	c, Sampson, Auger
Smith, Hopper, lb	rf, Howe
Capt. Dunsford, rb	lf, Sibley

Score: Monson Academy 37, Aggie Sophomores 16; baskets from floor, Weeks 7, Kidd 6, Dunsford 2, Entwistle 2, Leahy, Sibley 2, Howe 2, Huntington, Goodnough; baskets on free tries, Dunsford, Sibley 4; free tries missed, Dunsford 5, Sibley. Referee, D. W. Ellis; timer, Prof. Dewing. Time, 20-minute halves.

The Academy basketball team won its first important game of the season last Saturday at Chicopee, when they defeated the Chicopee High school team, 35 to 21. It was the first time in several years that Monson defeated Chicopee on the Chicopee floor. One of the Springfield papers declared it the fastest and cleanest game ever played on the Chicopee floor. The first half was close, but when the Monson team got used to the floor they took the lead and kept it throughout the game. In the last half Coach French put in three substitutes, which slowed the team work considerably, but each one of the Monson players is given credit for fine work. Smith and Dunsford are considered the fastest backs that have opposed the Chicopee team this year. The line-up:

Monson.	Chicopee
Entwistle, Leahy, lf,	rb, Nowak
Kidd, rf,	lb, Shaw, Davidson
Weeks, Squires, c.	c, Cunningham
Smith, Hopper, lb,	rf, Parker, Austin
Dunsford, r b,	lf, Savaria

Score: Monson 35, Chicopee 21; baskets from floor, Dunsford 5, Kidd 4, Weeks 3, Entwistle 2, Smith 2, Cunningham 2, Shaw 2, Parker, Savaria, Nowak, Austin, Davidson; baskets on free tries missed, Dunsford 3, Parker 2, Savaria. Referee, Donnelly, Training School; timers, Heffke and Leahy; time, 20-minute halves.

A WALKING BATTERY

By JULIUS D. WALKER

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

When Johnny Barker was eighteen years old he enlisted in the United States navy as electrician. In the navy Johnny learned two things. He learned all about electrical contrivances, and he learned what were and what were not his rights. Moreover, he associated with men who were trained to fight.

When Johnny's term of enlistment expired he entered the service of a company interested in laying a trolley line in the far west. The road ran between two towns, either of which was bad enough, but both together were frightful. They are cities now, helped to become such by the improvements put in by Johnny Barker, but at that time they had not put away Judge Revolver, who dispensed all the law there was in the territory. Every one told Johnny that he must go about armed if he wished to live, but Johnny said he wouldn't be quick enough with a revolver if attacked and he might as well be shot without one as with one. Indeed, without one he would be saved the labor of carrying about so heavy a weapon.

Johnny went to a dance one night, and among the girls he asked to dance with him was Nora O'Neill, a red headed Irish girl who worked in a house where meals were served to workmen on the trolley line. While the couple were standing on the floor waiting for the piano and fiddle to furnish music a young man indigenous to the country stepped up to Johnny and said:

"I want you to understand yer jumpin' my claim. Don't you do it ag'in."

Having thus put out a warning, the fellow went away. Johnny asked the girl what he meant.

"Oh, he thinks he owns me, but he don't! I wouldn't have nothing to do with such a low down feller."

Johnny danced with Nora several times after that. Jim Turkle, who claimed her for his own, glared at him, but committed no overt act. Johnny was unarmed, and those who knew Jim averred that he would never kill a man without giving him a chance for his life. Since he had killed half a dozen and no one had killed him this didn't seem to be much of an advantage to his enemies.

But before the dance broke up Jim served notice on Johnny that he had better be prepared in the morning either to give or to take a dose of lead.

When 9 o'clock came and Johnny had not been killed the people of the town lined the main street to see the work done. They wouldn't have arisen early to see a fracas of this kind; but, being up, they didn't mind looking on. Johnny had not yet come out of his quarters, and some said he had gone away during the night. Others declared that he was at home and one who had served Uncle Sam wouldn't run away from an enemy.

Meanwhile Johnny, who had made friends with the better class of citizens, was informed by them that Jim Turkle meant what he said and, since he had given notice of his intention, would not spare his enemy because he was unarmed. They advised Johnny to sit up all night and practice firing at a mark and especially at doing quick work with a revolver. But Johnny said he didn't think that he could equal his enemy in that line if he practiced a year. But, though he didn't seem to relish the position he was in, he said he had thought of a method of procedure that would make the chances more equal.

It was about half past 9 that Johnny left his quarters and with his hands in his pockets sauntered down the street, lined with people waiting to see him killed. There was no evidence of a weapon anywhere about him. He wore an ordinary business suit that he had brought with him from the east. If he had carried a weapon under the short sack coat it would have been apparent. Only one change was to be noticed in his apparel. Instead of the sombrero of the country he usually wore he had on a derby. Around it was a very singular band, pierced at every inch by a hole about a quarter of an inch in diameter.

Turkle had been all the morning standing in front of the Alhambra saloon waiting for his victim. Seeing Johnny coming, he advanced to meet him. Jim scowled at his enemy keeping his hands in his pockets, since he should have kept them in readiness to defend himself. Jim could not see a weapon, but supposed Johnny had one concealed. When they came at a fair range Jim sent a bullet at his enemy. Since it failed to hit and Jim was a dead shot, those looking on supposed that it had been fired to warn Johnny that the fight was on.

Then commenced the most remarkable firing that crowd had ever seen. From the holes in Johnny's hatband came a series of smoke puffs, accompanied by sharp reports. Johnny's head was seen to bend slightly, as though he were aiming. He also turned to the right or to the left that he might bring other holes in his hatband to bear on his enemy. Jim was so astonished that he forgot to fire till one of the bullets sent from his enemy's hat pierced his side and paralyzed all effort. He fell and was picked up by his friends, and Johnny passed on.

He had rigged short pistol barrels in his hat; also a battery with wires leading from it to circuit making keys in his pocket.

Tuning Bells.

"What a beautiful tone that bell has!" is often heard. There are few, however, who know how a bell receives its joyful or solemn tones. All bells after they are cast and finished must go through a process of tuning the same as any other musical instrument before they respond with a clear, true tone. Every bell sounds five notes, which must blend together in order to produce perfect harmony. The tuning of a bell is done by means of shaving thin bits from various parts of the metal. It is as easy for an expert bell tuner to put a bell in tune as it is for a piano tuner to adjust his instrument to perfect chords. At first thought it would seem that a bell would be ruined should a tuner shave off too much at the last tuning, or the fifth sound, but such is not the case. He would, however, be obliged to begin over, starting again with the first tone and shaving the bell till it gave forth its harmonious sound at the fifth tone.—Scientific American.

His Own Valuation.

"Belle tells me she is sorry she ever married you," said a young lady to the husband of her dearest friend.

"So she ought to be," he retorted. "She did some nice girl out of a good husband!"

NOBODY SPARED.

Kidney ills seize young and old
Come quick with little warning.
Children suffer in early years—
Can't control the kidney secretions.
Girls are languid, nervous, suffer pain.
Women worry, can't do daily work.
Men have lame and aching backs.
The cure for man, woman or child
Is to cure the cause—the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys—
Cure all forms of kiduey suffering.
Palmer testimony proves it.

Mrs. Elizabeth Maxwell, 16 Park St., Palmer, Mass., say: "Undoubtedly my age had a great deal to do with my kidney complaint. My back ached and it was impossible for me to lie in a comfortable position. I was often so dizzy that I could not stand alone, and the kidney secretions were unnatural. My whole system seemed to be run down. I finally saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and procured a box from Lynde & Gould's Drug Store. This remedy proved to be just the one I needed, the first few doses giving me relief. The pain lost its severeness and my kidneys became normal. I am only too glad to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills."

Private Brainard's Ruse

By DOROTHY R. MURRAY

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Tom Brainard was always full of Old Nick. He was at the bottom of all the mischief done at school, and when he was at college got into so many scrapes that at the end of his sophomore year the president informed him he needn't come back the next term.

Tom's father put him into a business concern, but the boy soon proved that he was as unfit for business as for study. Sitting on a high stool all day adding columns of figures was not to Tom's taste. He soon got discharged for inattention to his work, and then his father was at his wits' end to know what to do with him. Tom said he'd like to be a soldier, so his father went to Washington to try to get him a commission, but was told there that if his son wanted a commission he had better enlist and work his way up from the ranks.

Tom enlisted and, though he took to soldiering better than anything else, was constantly transgressing the army regulations and consequently getting himself into trouble. He enlisted in the cavalry and was sent out with his regiment to a two company post in the west. The only people to fight were Indians, and at the time of Tom's arrival they were peaceful.

Fort B., where Tom's company was stationed, was near a hamlet that has since become a large town. The fort was intended as a point of observation for a tribe of Indians whose reservation was but a few miles away. Tom served a year at the fort, one-third of which was spent in the guardhouse. He was known by the officers to be a gentleman and his offenses were not serious; indeed, he was rather an annoyance than otherwise. So finally his captain told him that if he would leave the army he would guarantee his discharge. But Tom declined. He said he had come into the service for a commission and intended to stay there till he got one.

Soon after this the Indians broke loose from their reservation and went about murdering settlers wherever they could find them. The savages numbered several thousand warriors, and the troops in the fort numbered sixty-two. The "great father" had put a force down near the Indians just big enough for them to eat up when they got ready.

One day there was consternation in the fort. The Indians were coming to attack it, and if they did they would doubtless take it and kill everybody in it, including women and children. Besides, many of the people from the little town or settlement near by had come in, the merchants bringing their stocks of goods and all bringing their household belongings.

As the Indians approached the soldiers went out to meet them, the major in command hoping to pacify rather than to fight them. Six hundred Indians attacked him, and after a scrimmage several redskins, including their chief, were killed. When the chief fell the Indians drew off, though it was known that they would renew the fight with redoubled fierceness. After dark the troops withdrew to the fort and shut themselves in.

That night was a fearful one in the inclosure, death staring every one in the face. It was known that re-enforcements had been sent from Leavenworth, but it would require several days for them to make the march. Tom Brainard told his captain that he had a plan. He was conducted to the major commanding and proposed it. The major had no confidence in it, but permitted Tom to try it.

A stock of cigars and tobacco had been brought into the fort, including a wooden Indian that an enterprising tobacconist had brought from St. Louis. The Indian was sitting with a cainnet in his mouth. Tom bored a hole through the back of the neck and put a real pipe in the Indian's mouth. Then he introdnced a tube into the hole he had bored, so that by snoking on the tube the Indian would appear to smoke

Tom told his commander what his plan was and asked him as soon as it was light the next morning to convene all the officers at the fort on the parapet, put the wooden Indian in the circle and have some one concealed pull on the tube at the back of his head, the pipe having been lighted. He wished them all to appear to be in council.

This being understood, Tom rode ont with an escort and a white flag. The Indians met him, and he told them that the spirit of their chief had come into the fort and made peace. The Indians were incredulous. They had the chief's body. Tom offered to show him to them at the fort smoking with the officers. They rode with him to the fort, arriving early in the morning. Tom would not permit them to come within a quarter of a mile of the post, but this was near enough for them to see the wooden Indian sitting on the rampart in a circle of officers blowing clouds of smoke. The Indians, astonished, rode away and spread the news to all the tribe.

That was the end of the uprising. Soon after Tom's rnse the new chief came to the fort and ratified the peace made by his predecessor.

Tom, in recognition of his services in saving the lives of the garrison, was promoted to be a commissioned officer, and a very good one he made too.

Stage Snow.

In "Personal Reminiscences of Henry Irving" Bram Stoker lets his readers into the secret of how the snow scene in "The Corsican Brothers" was made so effective:

"All over the stage was a thick blanket of snow, white and glistening in the winter snnrise—snow that lay so thick that when the duelists, stripped and armed, stood face to face they each secured a firmer foothold by clearing it away. Of many wonderful effects this snow was perhaps the strongest and most impressive of reality. The public could never imagine how it was done. It was salt—common coarse salt—which was white in the appointed light and glistened like real snow. There were tons of it. A crowd of men stood ready in the wings with little baggage trucks such as are now used in the corridors of great hotels, silent with rubber wheels. On them were great wide mouthed sacks full of salt. When the signal came they rushed in on all sides, each to his appointed spot, and tumbled out his load, spreading it evenly with great wide bladed wooden shovels."

Fairly Warned.

He—My dear, I can't afford to buy you that hat. She—Still, you'd save money if you did. He—How so? She—Because I'll just be ill if I don't have it, and you know what doctors' bills are.

Hit Both Ways.

"It ain't no fun bein' a kid," observed a boy bitterly. "You always hafter go to bed when you ain't sleepy an' git up when you are."—Toledo Blade.

Where Plato Taught.

The famous academy of Plato was in a suburb of Athens, about a mile north of the Dypilum gate. It is said to have belonged to the hero Academus; hence the name. It was surrounded with a wall and adorned with walks, groves and fountains. Plato possessed a small estate in the neighborhood and for some fifty years taught his "divine philosophy" to young and old assembled in the academy to listen to his wise words. After Plato's death in 348 B. C. the academy lost much of its fame, but the beauty remained for centuries after the great teacher was no more. New York American.

Poet Laureate.

The office of poet laureate practically begins with Chaucer, who assumed the title about 1385. After Chaucer the office was more or less in the shadow, but from Spenser in 1590 the line of poet laureate is pretty well filled down to the present time. The office is largely honorary and has not always been held by the greatest of English poets. Dryden, Wordsworth and Tennyson being the most illustrious of its holders. Exchange.

The Lavish Jenkins.

In October, 1886, a religiously minded Buckinghamshire farmer named Jenkins brought his firstborn to the parish church to be christened, and this was to be the name: Abel Benjamin Caleb Daniel Ezra Felix Gabriel Haggai Isaac Jacob Kish Levi Mahonah Nehemiah Obdiah Peter Quartus Rechab Samuel Tobiah Uzziel Vaniah Word Xystus Zechariah. It will be observed that the names are all arranged in alphatetical order and are as far as possible selected from Scripture. It was only with the very greatest difficulty that the clergyman dissuaded Mr. Jenkins from doing the lasting wrong to his child that he had unwittingly devised, but eventually it was decided to christen the boy simply Abel.—Chambers' Journal.

His Drawback.

"They tell me," said the junior partner, "that the man to whom we have been sending so many bills belongs to a rather fast set."

"Well," answered the senior partner, "he may belong to the fast set, but he's a slow settler."—Exchange.

Health For Sick Women

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or secured so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every woman you meet has either been benefited by it, or knows some one who has.

In the Pinkham Laboratory are files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made exclusively from roots and herbs, and is perfectly harmless.

The reason why it is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the female organism, restoring it to healthy and normal activity.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials such as the following prove the efficiency of this simple remedy.

Coloma, Wisconsin.—"For three years I was troubled with female weakness, irregularities, backache and bearing down pains. I saw an advertisement of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking several bottles I found it was helping me, and I must say that I am perfectly well now and can not thank you enough for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me." —Mrs. John Wentland, R. F. D., No. 3, Box 60, Coloma, Wisconsin.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

The Famous Rayo

Gives the Best Light at Any Price

When you pay more than the Rayo price for a lamp, you are paying for extra decorations that cannot add to the quality of the light. You can't pay for a better light, because there is none. An oil light has the least effect on the human eye, and the Rayo Lamp is the best oil lamp made, though low in price. You can pay $5, $10, or $20 for some other lamp, and although you get a more costly lamp, you can't get a better light than the white, mellow, diffused, unflickering light of the low-priced Rayo.

Has a strong, durable shade-holder. This season's burner adds to the strength and appearance. Made of solid brass, nickeled, and easily polished.

Big January Clearance Sale

Cloaks, Suits, Dresses, Costumes, Skirts and Children's Garments Has Just Begun

Special Notice

On account of the very low prices at which these garments will be sold, we cannot send out any goods on approval and a small charge will be made for Alterations.

We've had clearance sales of Women's and Children's garments before—it's a settled policy of this house—but never one that approached this in the magnitude of its offerings or the extent of its price cutting. It's because never before have we entered January with so great a stock. We make it a rule in our garment business to carry large assortments right up to the clearance period. It costs to do it, but it pays in satisfied customers.

Due to our growing business the custom finds us now with a great stock that must be cleared.

This can only be accomplished by price concessions reaching in many instances well into cost itself. But we've done a large business and we've pleased our patrons with unequaled assortments, so we're content to accept losses now. Boiled down to a phrase we've

FIREMEN NEARLY SMOTHER.

Two Partially Overcome by Smoke in House Fire.

THREE MEN CONQUER MORNING BLAZE

Rush to Rural District in Response to Telephone Call and Save House and Contents.

A fire which might easily have resulted in the loss of several lives, but which was fortunately extinguished with no more serious results than a financial loss of three or four hundred dollars, broke out in the home of Peter Gernon, just off the Thorndike road on the road to Palmer Center, just before 3 yesterday morning. That Mr Gernon and his family of a wife and five children are alive is due to his waking just as he did; that they still have a home to go back to, only slightly damaged, is due to efficient work on the part of three members of the fire department during which two of them—Chief Summers and M. Scott French—came near being "done up" by smoke.

Chief Summers was called out of bed to answer a telephone call. "My house is all on fire, come up at once!" That was all there was to it, and it took Central some time to locate the call on the Palmer Center rural line The place was finally found however and Chief Summers started with M Scott French and F. L. Jones, in a team from the stable, into which they loaded the five small chemical extinguishers kept in the engine house. A quick trip was made to the house, which was found to be filled with smoke, but no fire was visible. French went up the main stairway to the second floor, and Summers was making a circuit of the building when he heard French call; hastening to the front and up the stairs he found his man nearly down and out with the smoke and pretty well dazed Helping him to the stairs Summers shot his extinguisher at a speck of flame which just then showed on the floor at one side. He then crawled on the floor to the windows of the front side of the house, opening two to let the smoke out; in the same way he found another at the rear and smashed that, as he could not raise it He called for another extinguisher, and when it arrived was so nearly done up himself that a sharp dash of the contents in his face was necessary to bring him back to himself. The smoke cleared somewhat by this time, and the seat of the fire was speedily found and it was put out in short order. The loss on the building will be about $150, and the same on furniture. The former was insured through the Hellyar agency, and the latter with R. E Cummings.

The fire started in the bottom of the chimney, which was built from the cellar up through the house, practically in the center, and had probably been smouldering for some time, for the bricks were so hot that timbers set into them at the floor had been charred off. The fire had spread on each side of the chimney to the partition support, and in this space had gone to the ceiling of the second floor, but had not broken through at any point. At the ground floor and at the second story floor the fire had spread laterally on each side between the floor timbers to the sides of the building, about ten feet in either direction. It was a hard blaze to get at, and fortunately for Mr. Gernon, had not broken through when he awoke, or nothing could have been done to save the building When Mr. Gernon woke and went to the lower floor to send his telephone call for help, the smoke was so thick that he could not return again, and he was also soon driven from the lower rooms for the same reason.

Long Distance Pedestrian.

En Route From Pacific to Atlantic, Visited Palmer Wednesday.

G. Stewart White of Chicago, Ill, walking from there to Portland, Me, on a wager involving $3000, visited Station Agent G. A. Rice Wednesday to secure his signature. White stated that just before Christmas two Chicago business men made a wager. One bet the other $1500 that White couldn't walk the 1234 miles between Chicago and Portland in 30 days The bet was taken, the $3000 was put up, and White consented to try the stunt, provided he got $750 if he turned the trick. White left Chicago December 24 at 1 15 p. m. He was to take no money with him, but is allowed to accept any money or clothing that is given him on the way. He stays over night in police stations and must get the signature of some of the police officials wherever he stops, together with the signature of the railroad agent in the same city or town He must be in Portland at 9 a. m. on the 22d in order to win the wager. He stated that he was 50 miles ahead of the schedule Wednesday and that he would be in Portland by midnight to-night. If he makes the trip in 30 days he will beat the world's record established in 1906 by Edward Payson Weston, the famous pedestrian.

SWIFT RIVER DROWNING.

Man in Chase of Wounded Deer Goes Through Ice.

SUNDAY FATALITY NEAR BONDSVILLE

Unsuccessful Search For the Body, Which May Not Be Recovered Until Ice Thaws.

A drowning accident occurred Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock about a mile north of Bondsville, on the opposite side of the Swift river. Sanislaus Daboic, who lives with his brother-in law, John Skava, on what is known as the Moynahan farm, while pursuing a wounded deer on the ice nearly opposite his home, either broke through the ice or fell through a hole and was drowned. The deer which he was pursuing was also drowned. Just how it became wounded is not known as there have been several conflicting stories told regarding it.

Monday morning Chief of Police B. W. Buckley, Patrolman Oliver Denis and Deputy Fish and Game Commissioners Dennis Shea and A H. Eldredge, all of Ware, went early to the scene of the accident and searched the greater part of the day for the body but were unsuccessful. The ice was cut in several places and a most diligent search was made with grappling irons and hooks. The cap he wore was discovered and also the deer, which was taken out and brought by Mr Eldredge to his home in Ware. A report is in circulation that the venison was stolen the night after its capture.

Mr. Daboic is well known in this village as at one time he worked for some time for the company. He leaves a wife and two small children, who the day before the accident went on a visit to relatives in Norwich Ct

Mr. Skava came very near losing his life in trying to rescue his brother in-law, but was saved through the efforts of some women. It is not expected that the body will be found before the breaking up of the ice and possibly it may never be found as the underbush is so dense at the place the accident occurred to make a chance of recovery almost impossible.

Doings of the Legislature.

Analysis of Lodge's Vote—The Future—Attorney General's Report—State Forester's Recommendations—Educational Matters.

BOSTON, Jan. 18, 1911.

Here is an analysis of the final vote for United States senator, in the first joint convention which was held to-day. Of the 279 votes cast, with 140 necessary for a choice; Senator Lodge had 146; Sherman L. Whipple, the Democratic candidate, had 121; Butler Ames had seven; President Lowell of Harvard had two, and Former Governor Guild, John R Thayer and Sylvester J McBride of Watertown, the Socialist candidate, had one each. Lodge's vote was made up of 144 Republicans and two Democrats, but he lacked nine of getting the entire Republican strength. Six of the nine voted for Butler Ames, two for President Lowell and one for Guild Whipple lacked five of the whole Democratic vote. Two of them went to Lodge; one was for Ames, one for Thayer and one did not vote. Speaker Walker's four in the House on Tuesday paid heed to his personal appeal to them this morning and he did not have a vote to-day. Two went to Lodge and two to Lowell. Thus the long contest is ended and now the next great disturbance promises to be over the redistricting of the state for Congress, if any gerrymander is attempted.

In connection with this great struggle over the election of Senator Lodge, it is pertinent to note that it is quite possible that it will be the last time that such a thing will occur in Massachusetts Senator Crane will come up two years hence for re-election. Of course it is possible that there will be another such struggle then, but it is not probable. History would not be as likely to repeat itself so soon. Before another election is likely, there may be expected the adoption of the long-agitated constitutional amendment whereby the senators will be elected by the people Hence we seem to be on the eve of a historic epoch and to be looking to-day, probably for the last time, on a great struggle over the legislative election of a senator. The scene was to be remembered on account of the popular interest. In the member's gallery was the widow of the late governor Roger Wolcott, and with her was a prominent English woman, while the entire members' gallery, where they sat, was filled by women of their class, apparently. A great crowd filled the public gallery and the interest was intense The applause over the result of the election was more to be noticed in the members' gallery than either on the floor or in the public gallery.

Now comes the question of the outcome. Already it is a question in the minds of the members. Republicans say that now they must submit to the verdict of the people. Democrats are congratulating themselves upon the fact that Lodge was elected by Republican votes and that the party is responsible for the election. The case will be put before the people in the fall and in some way their sentiment will be expressed. There will be nothing but the head of the Republican ticket to show the sentiment of the people on the election. Had it not been for Speaker Walker's positive refusal to permit the use of his name, he would have been a formidable candidate, and it seems quite probable that he would have been elected But the truth is that the stand which he took in favor of Lodge last summer prevented his becoming a candidate himself and so he was held by honor not to take the field when the real strength of his support became evident. He might easily have been elected if he had said the word. It is said of him to-day that he is young and can afford to wait six years. But that implies that Lodge will not then be able to oppose him, or will not be able to carry a popular election against him.

The nomination of Sherman Hoar was a singular selection on the part of the Democracy. There was no reason to suppose that he would be an acceptable candidate. At the polls, he would certainly be weak. There is a statement that Gov. Foss was responsible for his selection. If so, then the governor did not get as popular a man as he might, though Whipple probably drew as many votes as would have united upon any Democrat. A stronger selection might have been made than Whipple, and the fact that he held practically the entire solid Democratic vote does not disprove this statement.

It seems inevitable that there should be charges of corruption in connection with this affair. They have been floating about the state house with specification and some of them are of a nature to demand attention. But it is notorious that such matters are particularly difficult to verify and nothing has been brought to the attention of the Legislature which demands investigation. Just as soon as any man is willing to stand responsible for a statement of fact, and make it seem that the Legislature ought to take up the matter, there is no doubt that the thing will be done. But there is no present reason to believe that anything will be done.

Attorney General Malone makes public to-day the last report he will ever make as attorney general of Massachusetts During the year his office has had 3363 cases, or an average of over 10 a day for every working day of the year. This shows how very busy his office has been. The number of informations from the state treasurer under the corporation and inheritance tax laws was 758, and there were 787 other inheritance tax cases. These and informations at the hands of the tax and corporation commissioners made the largest number of items in the office. There were 33 indictments for murder The expenditures of the office were $38.175, and $1881 was collected in fees, leaving the net cost of the office $36, 295. The business of the office has grown steadily from 2534 in 1906, when Mr. Malone came in, to 3363 in 1910

State Forester Rane has a batch of bills before the committee on agriculture requiring stricter legislation for the control of forest fires and for the suppression of the dangerous moth nests. A very strong case was made out for a stringent bill to regulate the way in which wood-choppers leave the brush and slash from their forest cuttings It might seem as if a private citizen had a right to do as he pleased on his own land about such matters, but there was strong evidence that such carelessness as is usually practiced is the cause of constant forest fires and heavy loss, whereas regulations such as Forester Rane proposes, putting the brush in small piles and burning it, will protect the forests very materially. The proposed law will bother the farmers, but will save them money in the long run.

Commissioner Snedden of the State Board of Education, in his annual report, sent to the Legislature to day, says that the most striking fact in connection with public education during recent years has been the rapid extension of its activities and responsibilities. It is a prominent phase of the evolution of modern social economy, which finds its origin in efforts to cure and prevent crime, vice, ill health, ignorance, poverty and shiftlessness, and would procure for all children a full, fair and free start in life and promote physical, vocational, civic and cultural well being Publicly supported education as now conceived is simply one of the agencies in the social program of civilized peoples. The machinery of public education must be organized so as to make it more and more possible to employ scientific methods. Country schools have peculiar problems, not found in city schools. Supervision is incomplete. The report takes up in some detail the case of children who are not able to go on with the higher courses because of incapacity, but yet who should have better attention than at present. The weakest point in the country schools is the compensation of the teachers. Another serious problem is to get men to take up teaching as a profession, so as to teach in elementary schools or become superintendents. The report pays much attention to agricultural education and supports the proposition strongly of educating boys for farming more than the state ever dreamed of this far. Strict responsibility should be put upon the administrative officers of the schools. Defective children ought not to be committed to institutions as long as they can be provided for at home.

Arcanum Council Celebrates.

Initiation, Visit of Grand Officers, Turkey Supper Served.

Quahoag council of the Royal Arcanum enjoyed a gala night of more than usual interest Tuesday, with a roll call, identification meeting, visit from grand officers, installation and a turkey supper, in addition to the regular meeting.

Of the 120 members of the council, 75 answered to their names in person or by letter, or came in afterward. The members are scattered from Canada to California, and some traveled long distances to be present Tuesday night. The letters read were filled with regret at inability to be present, and good wishes for the future of the council; one was from a member who has not been in a council meeting since leaving Palmer nearly 20 years ago, but who still maintains his connection with the order.

Present at the meeting were Grand Regent George H Wiley of Malden and District Deputy Belding and suite of Springfield installed these officers: Regent, D F. Dillon; vice regent, C A Royce; orator, L E Chandler; past regent, C H. Babcock; secretary, James Summers; collector, R E Cummings; treasurer, W L. Shaw; chaplain, H. H. Hall; guide, S B Keith; warden, William Gale; sentinel, O. W. Soule; trustee for three years C. A LeGro. After the installation Grand Regent Wiley gave a very interesting talk on King's chapel in Boston, of which he is custodian, describing the reasons for its erection, the difficulties encountered, the present ownership of the property and many valuable historical facts concerning this ancient building

After the installation the company to the number of 100, including about 40 visiting brethren from the Springfield councils, sat down to an excellent hot turkey supper, served by Caterer C. A Royce. Following the supper the new orator, L. E. Chandler, acted as toastmaster, and there were addresses by Deputy Belding and Grand Regent Wiley, Brothers Mead and Dargin of Springfield, also Grand Vice Regent Hobson, D F. Dillon, C. L Waid and R. E Cummings of Quahoag council.

The members are to make a strenuous effort for a record during the coming year, as it is to be dignified by the election of one of its members—Grand Vice Regent Hobson—to the position of Grand Regent of the state, and propose to make the council worthy of the honor.

Ware Will Celebrate.

150th Anniversary of Town's Incorporation To be Observed.

The town of Ware will celebrate the 150th anniversary of its incorporation Labor Day. The real 150th anniversary would be in November, too late in the year for celebrating in the manner desired. An appropriation will be asked for at the annual town meeting in March, but many plans are now being made, as there seems to be no opposition to anything within reason.

The general committee, Henry K. Hyde, J H. G Gilbert, F D. Gilmore and E. P. Morse held a meeting last Friday. It is the plan to hold the principal celebration in Grenville Park, with sports in the daytime and fireworks in the evening. A big street parade is scheduled, and Main street will be finely decorated. A loan exhibit of antiques will be shown in the town hall under the direction of George E. Tucker. The heads of other committees are as follows: Fireworks, Charles E. Stevens; decorations, Henry O Robinson; invitations, Hubert M. Coney: parade, Minot C. Wood; sports, Bernard W. Southworth; publicity, R. G. Capron; feeding, F. M. Sibley.

Sale Continues Throughout the Month

10th SEMI-ANNUAL

Pre-Inventory Clearance Sale

This is our greatest sale—the culmination of the season's trading. We don't need to tell you much about it—its record of the past is a brilliant one. Its success is founded upon genuine value-giving and stimulated by publicity that tells the truth. But there's one feature of this season's sale that we'd emphasize and that is that it's not only a Clearance of our own well-known stocks, but

Understand this doesn't mean that we're offering you job lot or faulty merchandise, but instead reputable goods bought at a price from manufacturers that wish to clear their shelves as we do ours. It comprehends not only winter goods but splendid values—notably in silks and wash goods for the season that is to come. We stake our reputation on the worth of these offerings—they're far and beyond anything we've been able to offer in the past—

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 20, 1911.

A FAIR PROPOSITION.

In the Springfield Sunday Union a few weeks ago appeared a five-column article giving the opinions of several Palmer citizens who have served the town in official capacities as to what might be done along civic lines for the betterment of the town. That of William E McDonald, who who has had an experience of 14 years in the town's service, will be given hearty approval by all who have had any experience in such lines. He said:

"It seems to me that most of us are too ready to criticise public officials, often, I fear, unjustly. We have acquired the habit of paying close attention to such of their acts as do not meet with our entire approval and of freely expressing our unfavorable opinions. * * * It is my belief that a citizen who goes to any official or board of officials of this town with a desire to learn the reasons why any action has been taken, will be welcomed and given the information asked. * * * We cannot expect that the town officials will make public immediately all the reasons for, and the facts connected with their actions; consequently it is quite natural that misunderstandings arise and officials be unjustly condemned. * * * Bearing in mind that men in office are public servants, we ought fairly to accord them the treatment which is given all other servants. * * * Many citizens who could render valuable service to towns are reluctant to take office because of such conditions. They are willing to give the time, but they are unwilling to face the constant criticism and complaint which they believe are certain to be experienced."

There is much food for thought in what Mr. McDonald has to say It is a condition which exists in every town where public officials try to do their whole duty for the community, to an extent hardly realized by any but the criticised official. But a certain portion of unjust criticism is due at times to a lack of knowledge by the public of matters which it is their right to know. Town officials too often neglect to take the public into their confidence regarding town matters, the resulting ignorance creating the very condition which they deprecate. A little more information on one side and a little more charity on the other would go a long way toward making less friction all around.

A MATERIAL drop in the prices of butter and eggs has taken place this week, due to various causes, it is claimed. It is alleged that the cold storage warehouses have been overstocked with these commodities, that they have been held back in an attempt to force high prices until now they must be disposed of at some price, and the consumer gets the benefit. At the same time the "spring pullets" are beginning to yield a larger supply of "hen fruit," and strictly fresh eggs are not the extreme high-priced luxury they were a few weeks ago. One reason advanced for the cold storage evacuation is that the national government has passed the word for a clearing out in the interests of pure food, and some of the stuff has been refrigerated for several years. If that's the case it's time it was taken out—but who wants to eat it, if they know it?

A MOVE to drive the trading stamp from Massachusetts has been begun by the retail merchants' protective association of Boston, in a bill filed with the Legislature. There can be no question but that the cost of the stamps—which so many customers think they get for nothing, in return for which they secure "presents" of various kinds and values—are paid for in the long run by the customers themselves, in addition to the market price of the purchases with which the stamps are given. The scheme was tried in Palmer a number of years ago, but both people and merchants soon tired of it.

A BILL calculated to diminish contests over wills has been introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature It provides that the maker of a will may present it, sealed, to the probate court; witnesses may be summoned with a view to showing that the testator is of sound mind and capable of executing the document, and the heirs are to have the privilege of appearing in opposition. The testator is not compelled to make the contents of the will known, and if it is admitted to probate the document remains sealed until after his death.

A MASSACHUSETTS legislator has introduced a bill prohibiting the appearance of any woman in public in tights or on a bathing beach in skirts shorter that six inches below the knee; low-neck dresses must be provided with shoulder-straps He neglected to include elbow sleeves, low shoes, gossamer and flesh-colored stockings in his list, or to stipulate that rainy-day skirts should come within a certain number of inches of the ground. Regulations regarding the raising of skirts on muddy crossings were also overlooked. His wife hastens to disclaim any knowledge of the bill.

THERE will be troublous times in the future, apparently, for foreign residents caught making plans of our coast defenses and fortifications. This country has never seen fit to provide penalties for acts of this sort, and foreign government officials have been given much liberty in and about such places Recent revelations however have brought the matter to the front and Congress is asked to provide a punishment to fit the crime

A NEW use has been found for wireless telegraphy, a physician on an ocean steamer recently prescribing for a passenger on another 500 miles away by that method, thus saving his life, the patient's symptoms and the physician's instructions being transmitted by wireless. There is no record of the transmission of the physician's fee by the same method.

A PITTSBURG church has established an employment bureau, on the ground that "The saving of bodies by providing means of sustenance for them lies just as much within the province of the church as does the saving of souls." Right! A man is in no mood to listen to talk of salvation when he's half frozen and nearly starved, with no prospect ahead.

THE largest battleship ever built in this country was launched at Camden, N J., last Saturday and named the Arkansas—pronounced Arkansaw. She will have the greatest broadside gun fire of any fighting vessel afloat, the combined weight of a single discharge being 11,000 pounds.

DAY by day the wonders of aviation increase. The latest feat is the flight from land to a battleship miles at sea, the safe landing on the ship and safe return to the shore, the feat being accomplished at San Francisco this week by Eugene Ely.

IF all the petitions, bills and resolves presented to the Legislature are acted on, the session promises to be of unusual length. The number is 1497, or 249 more than last year.

SENATOR Lodge wins a reëlection in the United States Senate, to be sure, but his opponents sure had him "going some" for a time, and mighty scared at that.

PALMER NEWS.

Will Clear Close to $100.

K. of C. Minstrels Repeated For District Nursing Fund.

The Knights of Columbus gave their minstrel show again Wednesday evening, this time for the benefit of the treasury of the district nursing association. Every seat in the opera house—with the exception of six—was taken, and the association will clear about $100 The Knights gave their services, but the expenses of a show of this nature are of necessity heavy, and the opera house capacity—at the prices charged—is only about $240.

In some respects the performance surpassed the one given two weeks previous. The stage setting was new and particularly pleasing The rear of the stage was paneled with the K. of C. colors, purple and white, with the emblem of the order

Billy McDonald.
K. of C. Minstrels Monologist.

in the center and a large American flag at either side The costumes of the eight end men—eight, count 'em—were simply gorgeous: Trousers of electric blue with broad stripes of gold at the side; buff coats with blue cuffs and lapels; white dress shirts, immense wing collars of white and flaming red ties, with huge white chrysanthemums in the left coat lapel.

The performance went with as much dash as could be asked for, in spite of the new business. All the old songs were sung, but only three of the previous "gags" were used, new and timely ones being sprung on a new set of people All enjoyed the local hits immensely; no one takes offense at personal allusions in a performance of this kind if they are within bounds, and the performance Wednesday night was classed by one who has seen many such, as the brightest, cleanest bunch of fun of the kind he had ever seen. Billy McDonald gave his famous Dr. Cook lecture again, but had a new monologue which took like the measles.

The boys have had several invitations to give the performance elsewhere, but say "Never again." The show Wednesday evening was witnessed by visitors from a number of the towns hereabouts, and there was so large a crowd from Brimfield that a special electric car was run for their benefit after the show.

Telegraph Office Moved.

Now Located in Caryl's Block, in Quarters With Telephone Office.

The office of the Western Union Telegraph Company, which has from time immemorial been in the railway passenger station, is now located in the Caryl block on Main street, in the room of the manager of the telephone exchange, the new order of things going into effect this afternoon The change will be of convenience to patrons of the office in that it will be more convenient of access, and it is hoped the change will bring an improvement in the service, which has never been what it should be, especially in recent years which have brought a material increase in business activity to the town. The office is supposed to be open from 8 in the afternoon until noon, from 1 to 6 in the afternoon and from 7 to 8 at night, but there are many times during these hours when patrons find its services unavailable. Only one operator is maintained and no messenger boy; consequently there are days when much of the operator's time is taken up with message delivery, to the annoyance of telegram senders. There has also been much criticism of the closing of the office at 8 in the evening.

Woman's Club Entertains.

Annual Guest Night Enjoyed by a Large Number of Members and Friends.

A generous proportion of the members of the Palmer Woman's Club, with those who were fortunate enough to receive invitations, enjoyed a very pleasant evening last Friday, when the club gave its annual guest night. About 100 were present, and the occasion was one long to be remembered with pleasure. Masonic Hall, where the function was held, was tastefully trimmed with ferns and cut flowers and the national colors. The guests were received by Mrs H. W. Holbrook, Miss Ruth Gager and Mrs. H. W. Brainerd. The guests were entertained by Miss Grace Chamberlain of Cambridge, who gave "Capt. Brasshound's Conversion," a farce in two acts, and by John W. Roberts of Springfield, who sang very acceptably. Following the entertainment there was a social hour, during which light refreshments were served. The committee in charge of the affair was Mrs. C. L Wald, Mrs B Woodhead, Mrs L. T. Gray, Mrs. S. R. Carsley, Mrs. John Hamilton, Mrs. R E Cummings; the ushers were Miss Mabel Oakes, Mrs. H. M. Howe, Mrs. C. A. Tabor and Mrs. F. S Gordon

"The Heart of a Boy."

Illustrated Lecture Next Sunday Night in Congregational Church.

In the Congregational church next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock Rev. John Penry Marvin of Oxford will give an illustrated address on "The heart of a boy." Mr. Marvin is a young man who is intensely interested in the boy, and has established a summer camp for boys at Eastford, Ct., where he takes a limited number for the months of July and August. Mr. Marvin says that "To know a boy is better than to know about a boy," and he has worked upon this principle, coming in close touch with them in the home, the church, the club and the athletic field and peculiarly fitting him to speak intelligently on his subject The slides shown during the lecture were taken personally, and represent some phases of the speaker's work among boys; there will also be views of the famous garden city work in Worcester, and some of Judge Ben B. Lindsey's work. A silver offering will be taken.

Train's Narrow Escape.

Passenger train No 1 on the Central Vermont railroad, due in Palmer from New London at 5 13 in the afternoon, had a narrow escape from serious disaster yesterday at the coal shed siding of the Monson state hospital, about half a mile south of the Palmer station. The siding opens from the main track from the south, and yesterday afternoon the switch was left open by someone; the train, as it came along, took the switch and entered the siding, smashing into a coal car which was standing there Fortunately the train was traveling at a slow rate of speed and no damage was done

Union Temperance Meeting Coming.

"What effect has alcohol on efficiency in every-day life to a moderate drinker?" "Is there any real impairment to the brain cells or to muscular activity by the use of alcoholic liquors?" These are some of the questions that will be discussed at the union temperance meeting in the Baptist church Sunday evening, Jan. 29. Miss Cora Frances Stoddard, secretary of the Scientific Temperance Federation of Boston, is the speaker whom the W. C. T. U. has secured for the service. Miss Stoddard is a graduate of Wellesley College and has had experience as a teacher She is editor of the Scientific Temperance Journal, published by the Federation, and in her public addresses presents the various phases of the educational method of combatting alcoholic and similar drug habits She will have with her a number of charts that illustrate her subject. A collection will be taken at this service, and will go into the treasury of the local temperance union to help pay the expense of securing Miss Stoddard.

A Fine Speaker—Everybody Invited.

All persons interested in educational matters are invited and should make it a point to attend the meeting of the Men's League in the Congregational church next Wednesday evening, when Rev. Rufus Stimson, director of Smith Agricultural School at Northampton, has been secured to speak on "Education, old and new." Mr. Stimson has been engaged for some time in a study of agricultural education under the direction of the State Board of Education, and has made a most interesting report to that body His work and experience peculiarly fit him to speak on the subject chosen. Besides this, Mr. Stimson is a native of Palmer, his parents being Mr. and Mrs H. W. Stimson of Palmer Center, he is well known here and will no doubt be greeted by a large audience.

Opportunity to Hear Former Pastor

Members of the Congregational church will be given an opportunity next Thursday evening to hear Rev. Frank E. His talk will have to do with this phase of his work. The kindly feeling which the people of the church have for Mr. Jenkins assures him a large audience.

Steamer Boiler is All Right.

The boiler of the town's steam fire engine was inspected and tested Tuesday, and was pronounced all right, and permission given to run under the steam pressure formerly allowed. The steamer has been in use for some time, and there has been a feeling that the steam pressure allowed might possibly be slightly reduced; the boiler has been given great care however, which has borne fruit in the result stated above.

Trucking Company's Increased Facilities.

The Palmer Trucking Company has purchased of W. E. Kenyon & Son the trucking business which they have conducted for a number of years, and the equipment which they had. Held For Ransom

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

On a certain summer's afternoon Mr. James Gilbert of Gilbert's bank in a town we will call Hopedale opened the telephone in his private office to be greeted by a strange humming of the wires. Then two or three voices began calling and talking. Then some one used energetic language to central, and she answered resentfully. Then came a voice that gave the banker a start. It had been two years since he heard it. From the jingle of voices he made out the words:

"Auto ran over calf; pay $10; farmer won't let me go; no money; hurry up. Hello, central; hello, hello! Oh, dear!"

The banker smiled. Two years before while fishing from the wharf and before establishing the bank a summer girl from the hotel on the hill had come paddling about in her store made canoe. He saw at once that she was a novice. He saw also that she had not yet passed her twentieth year and was his style of beauty. For a young man of twenty-four who had fished a full hour without a nibble Mr. Gilbert was in luck.

Of course the owner of the canoe was bound to show off. It was only her second voyage in the birch bark, but she thought she knew all the canoe tricks and was ready to resent any advice. She wasn't tendered any to resent, however. The young man contented himself with taking off his coat and slipping off his shoes. When the canoe turned turtle he was ready. He took a long dive and came to the surface with the choking, struggling girl in his arms and reached the shore with her.

That evening he appeared at the hotel to be effusively thanked by Judge Henrys, the father, and by the grateful, if chagrined, canoeist. Several other evenings saw him there as well, and between talking politics with the father and canoeing with Miss Kitty the time was passed very pleasantly. Something was said about correspondence when father and daughter left for their home in the city. As a matter of fact two or three letters did pass, and then Uncle Sam's carriers failed to deliver. The young banker had puzzled a bit, as perhaps had some one else, and now, on account of the crossed wires, he was hearing her voice again.

What had that voice said? It was trying to reach some one at the hotel on the hill, but evidently making a failure of it. The owner was in trouble somewhere. It looked as if she had gone out in an auto and run down a calf and the farmer was holding her until the damages were settled. The banker thought for a moment and then ordered his auto around.

Which way? He had trusted to luck once and would again. Out of town by the west highway—over the bridge—up the long hill and then straight ahead for five miles. Far ahead he saw an auto beside the road with two female figures in it and a farmer in sulky attitude leaning against the fence. The females in the auto were Miss Henrys and a girl friend. There was handshaking and introductions, and Miss Kitty explained:

"We were coming along at about ten miles an hour when the calf ran in front of the machine. I was willing to pay damages, but had no money, and the man here would not take one of my rings."

"I hain't taking no rings any more. Feller come along here last summer and run over my old woman and then left a diamond ring that turned out to be glass."

He was given his money by the banker.

Of course Mr. Gilbert had to call at the summer hotel that evening to talk the matter over. There was something that the young people wanted to say, but they couldn't say it until after Judge Henrys had poured out his thanks and remembered that he had to meet a man in the lobby. Even after he had departed the matter lingered, but it was very soon cleared up.

Two weeks later, in the banker's auto, Miss Kitty and Mr. Gilbert went spinning over the west road. So earnest was their talk that they failed to note that they were drawing near the farm where the calf accident had occurred. They were forcibly reminded of the locality, however, when a hog suddenly rose from the wayside ditch in front of the farmhouse and reached the center of the road just in time to be converted into fresh pork. The farmer was looking on, and he came out to say, and looking at Miss Kitty as he said it:

"Ding my buttons, if you haven't went and gone and done it ag'in!"

"Of course I'll pay," said the banker as he took out his purse. "How much is it?"

"You needn't say anything to the gal about it, but I'll make it an even $3."

"You are very generous," was the reply as the money was handed over.

"What was he talking about?" asked the young lady as the banker returned to the auto and they proceeded.

"Um! He appears to be very sensible."

"But what was the talk about?"

"Oh, he—he said I ought to get married."

The young lady looked off into the fields and made no reply, and ten long minutes after he had spoken the banker added:

"And I think so too."

And a year later he did.

An Impromptu Christmas

And the True Christmas Feeling It Prompted

By EDWARD PIERCE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The blizzard raced across the foothills and screamed down the canyons, obliterating all trails that led to the Double Star ranch. It filled the air with smothering, flying flakes and plastered the sides of the bunk house with a thick white covering. The windows of the ranch house a hundred yards distant were oblongs of light that diffused a sickly yellow glow into the flying snow.

Ducie Case tossed another log on the blazing hearth and surveyed the silent crowd with growing disdain. At last he could no longer control himself and broke forth into violent speech:

"Say, you mum mouthed dummies, you long faced, solemn eyed, good-for-nothing cayuses, do you know this is Christmas eve?"

The moody circle about the fire straightened as by one accord and looked at the speaker with the first sign of interest that had been betrayed since the silent supper had ended.

"Do you know this is Christmas eve?" repeated Mr. Case impressively as he brought a pipe from his pocket and proceeded to clean it with the nervous energy that characterized his every movement.

"Of course we know it," growled Miller from his corner. "We didn't get any mail today—haven't had any for a week! Excuse—me—Christmas, coming! Bah!"

"You've got a grouch, Miller. You're always kicking about the mail, and I've never seen you get any letters yet—not even one of them picture postal cards that Frankie here gets so many of."

Ducie Case bustled out of his chair and noisily mounted the heavy table, where he looked down on his companions with a benevolent smile.

"Tonight's Christmas eve, boys, and I'm going to confess it's the onlikeliest Christmas eve I ever spent.

"Every one of you is downright homesick. That's what's the matter with you. I expect you're homesick every time Christmas comes around. If you can't get home to your folks and find an old fashioned Christmas—why, I say let's have Christmas right her in the Double Star bunk house. All in favor say 'eye.'"

"Aye!" came forth a mighty chorus from seven throats.

"Good! Now, gentlemen, there ain't any tree within three miles of the ranch except the maples at the big house, and they're too large. Can we have a Christmas tree?" he asked skeptically.

"Nix!" was the laconic reply.

"Well, then, you've all got socks. Hang 'em up here along by the chimney. We might as well do this Santy Claus business up nice and brown."

The men scattered, laughing, to their several bunks to search their effects for clean socks. When they returned Mr. Case was ready with hammer and nails to fasten them to the long shelf. The first to go up was his own, a huge blue woolen affair with a startling void presented by the sagging top.

"Now, what you going to put in 'em?" demanded Miller as he witnessed the hammering of the last nail into his own sock.

"Now, that's up to the rest of you in a way," drawled Mr. Case indifferently. "I've started this thing and got the ball rolling nicely. All you chaps has got to do is to find something to put in those socks. Seems as if you might find something to give each other just to remember the day and make things pleasant."

"Who feels like being very pleasant with no mail for a week and no prospect of any?" complained Frankie, rather peevishly. "I thought Christmas eve was the time for good things to eat and drink. I haven't seen the chink handing out any goodies yet."

"You go along and work that Christmas spirit business I was telling you about," commanded Mr. Case. "Sam Huh and me will take care of the eating end. Just watch my smoke!"

He disappeared behind the plank door that shut off the kitchen quarters from the living room, and they heard the sound of his strident voice mingled with the staccato objections of the Chinese cook.

Storrs stepped forward, a slight flush on his handsome face, and turned toward his companions. "I'm rather ashamed, boys, that Ducie had to remind us that it was the night before Christmas. It's certainly a dull time, and I believe we ought to do all we can to make it pleasant, even if the mail doesn't come at all. Suppose we make the best kind of a Christmas we can out of what we've got."

"Let's," agreed Miller boyishly. "Suppose we begin with Ducie's meal sack here. He must expect an automobile in that. What do you say?"

"Let's give him one," retorted Storrs cheerfully. "I saw one a minute ago." He reached for a magazine and drew a knife from his pocket. He turned to the advertising section and cut from it the picture of a large touring car. "What's the matter with that?" he crowed softly as he slipped it in Ducie's stocking.

"I got a couple of handkerchiefs that I've never used," said Frankie suddenly. "I'll give one to Ducie and one to somebody else. Let's get busy, boys."

They got busy and searched their trunks and their pockets for treasures that might go to fill a comrade's stocking. Pocketknives, handkerchiefs, a watch chain, a key ring, neck handkerchiefs, a pair of spurs, tobacco, cigars, a patent pencil, matchboxes—all changed hands deftly from pockets to one or another of the yawning stockings. When the little store of articles gave out they had recourse to the magazine and lavished all sorts of lithographed gifts upon each other.

They all entered into the spirit of the thing with an abandonment that was pathetic when one considered the barrenness of the ground upon which they tried to graft a Christmas. Whatever else the occasion lacked, the Yuletide spirit was there.

When Ducie Case emerged from the kitchen with the thoroughly cowed Sam Huh in his train they were laden with plates of red apples and yellow oranges, plates of crisp cakes fresh from their paper boxes and a large dish of candy, which Ducie placed in the middle of the table.

"Bring in the coffee, Sam, when I holler," said Ducie ceremoniously. Then he turned to the grinning cowpunchers surrounding the fire. "Let's see what Santy Claus has got for us, eh, boys?"

"You first, Ducie!" they insisted, and they watched him delightedly as he brought forth from the stocking a paper of his favorite tobacco, which Storrs also carried, and a silver watch chain.

"That was a great idea of mine," chuckled Ducie after he had identified the givers and thanked them warmly. "I have a feeling that this here is to be a kind of a merry Christmas, even if the mail don't get in."

After that there was no end to the fun. Each man found several surprising gifts in his stockings, and there was much merriment in identifying the givers and more interchange of good feeling than the Double Star had known in some time.

Presently Sam Huh brought in a pot of steaming coffee, and they gathered about the board and ate of the refreshments and toasted Mr. Ducie in the stimulating black liquid with much flattery.

When the meal was concluded Raymond Storrs sang a song in his fine tenor voice. It was a Christmas carol, one that they all knew, and they joined in the chorus with a vim. Frankie delivered an amusing monologue, and the taciturn Miller gave an absurdly funny imitation of a fashionable lady buying a hat. There were other songs and recitations and the quaffing of a weirdly constructed bowl of punch that Sam Huh had laboriously put together from several cookbooks and unlimited advice from the different members of the party.

"What's the matter with this Christmas?" demanded Frankie excitedly as 11 o'clock was struck on the tall clock in the corner.

"It's all right! It's been a bully one! Couldn't be better! Up to us to thank Ducie!" were some of the comments on the occasion.

There was the sound of hoofs pounding in the snow outside and a loud shout. Every man was on his feet with interested faces.

"The mail at last!" cried Miller excitedly. "Now we'll see what's what!"

They crowded about the door as Mr. West came over from the big house to open the mail bag. It had stopped snowing, and the stars were blazing in a cold, clear, dark sky.

"Letter for you, and you, and you," rattled Mr. West as he tossed letters here and there among his employees. They grasped them eagerly and then tucked them away for private perusal. It happened that each one received at least one letter, and Raymond Storrs received several with a San Francisco postmark, as well as a wooden case that was dumped on the floor ere the letter carrier drove away.

Storrs ripped off the cover while they hung breathlessly over him. From numerous careful wrappings he drew forth a large phonograph with a morning glory horn and a collection of wax music rolls. Deftly Storrs fitted the parts together and placed the machine on the table and wound it up. There was a cylinder in the machine, as if his sweetheart, who had sent it, had left it there that he might hear the continuation of a melody she had been singing.

There was a low, buzzing sound, and then there came forth from that instrument of wood and metal a sweet soprano voice singing with a delicate violin accompaniment:

"Oh, holy night, peaceful night."

As the hymn rang out every hat was whipped off and the little group stood bareheaded in the open doorway looking out at the same brilliant stars that had shone down over Bethlehem that long ago holy night when the first Christmas was sung over one who brought peace and good will into the world.

Afterward, as they followed Mr. West across the yard toward the big house where he said a feast awaited them, Frankie nudged Ducie Case with a razor-like elbow.

"I learned one thing tonight," admitted Frankie graciously, "and that was you can have Christmas cheer most anywhere, provided you've got the ingredients in your heart—eh?"

Ducie nodded. "Everybody has got the ingredients to make a happy Christmas in their hearts, only they don't stir 'em together to make 'em work properly. Haven't they, Norman?" He shot this question at the tall young man walking beside him with radiant face upturned to the stars.

Storrs pressed the phonograph that had registered the singing voice of his sweetheart close under his arm and smiled contentedly.

"You bet!" he cried emphatically.

Rosa Bonheur's Humble Lover.

When asked why she had never married Rosa Bonheur always answered: "Nobody ever fell in love with me. I have never been truly loved." More than one man, however, really worshiped her. But she inspired such deep respect that no man seems to have dared to reveal his feelings to her. There is a curious example of this fact, taken from the humble walks of life. On several occasions Rosa Bonheur had done service for a workingman who throughout his life spent his savings in buying engravings of her principal pictures and photographs of herself. His simple dwelling was a temple to her kindness. He described himself as "the earthworm in love with a star." The person here referred to—E. A. Bautray of Clermont-Ferrand—tells me that Rosa Bonheur once asked him why he was not married, and he replied by asking her the same question. Here was her answer: "Well, sir, it is not because I am an enemy of marriage, but I assure you that I have never had time to consider the subject." —"Reminiscences of Rosa Bonheur."

Paternalism In Groceries.

Paternalism with a vengeance is practiced in certain New York groceries. It is benevolent paternalism, though.

"Ma wants two pounds of sugar," said a child to a patriarch in the trade.

He consulted a calendar on the wall.

"I guess you'd better take only a pound today," he said, "and go kind of slow on that. The week is only half gone, but you have already eaten up three-fourths of your allowance. Tell your mother so."

The child promised to deliver the report on financial depression.

"That is the only way on earth to keep those people from running into debt," said the grocer. "The system is common in this neighborhood. I do it at the customers' request. Every pay day women with spendthrift husbands and an extravagant disposition of their own deposit enough money with the grocer and butcher to see the family through the week. They instruct us to let no one overdraw the amount, and except in cases where extra food is actually needed we stick to our end of the bargain."—New York Times.

Unhappiness.

They who have never known prosperity can hardly be said to be unhappy. It is from the remembrance of joys we have lost that the arrows of affliction are pointed.—Emile Zola.

FAMILY SACRIFICES

They Serve to Make a Merry Christmas

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"I don't see how we can afford to observe Christmas this year, Henry," remarked Mrs. Tiddleberry two weeks before that anniversary. "We've had so much sickness and bad luck during the past twelve months that to make any gifts will mean getting in debt for living expenses, and I am unwilling to do that."

Mr. Tiddleberry looked up from his paper with a relieved expression on his tired face. "I've been pondering that matter for several days, my dear."

Suddenly the wife looked up and saw her husband take a cigar from his pocket, regard it speculatively and then, sighing, return it to the case.

"Henry," she said, "smoke your cigar! You needn't think you're going to save on your only consolation just to buy some foolish nonsense for the children. How much of your month's salary will there be after you've laid aside the amount of the interest due the first of the year?"

"None," confessed her husband candidly.

"Then why should we try to observe Christmas just as if this year had been a prosperous one?"

"You have stumped me, Anne. I hate to give up Christmas, but I guess we'll have to."

"I'll do the best I can," promised Mrs. Tiddleberry as she folded up the stockings. "There will be enough to eat, but it will be plain. I laid a little money away for Bob's suit and for Linnie's new coat, and that will be all the Christmas they can have this year. I can make some black walnut candy for them and some popcorn."

When she broke the news to Linnie and Bob the next day their young faces grew quite round and solemn, and she felt a little lump in her throat as they trudged off to school with a cheerful "All right, mother, dear."

"They're disappointed enough," she murmured, "but they won't say anything. I'm proud of their pluck."

Mr. Tiddleberry developed a habit of working late in the city, and each night found him taking a later train to his suburban home until finally he stamped into the house on Christmas eve just as the clocks were striking 11.

"Henry Tiddleberry," said his wife severely. "It seems to me the importing business is picking up or you're getting behind with your books. There must be some reason for your working late at the office. You never did it before."

"There is an excellent reason, my dear," said Mr. Tiddleberry amiably as he hung his overcoat before the kitchen stove to dry, "which I will explain to you in due time. It certainly is a wild night, Anne—a typical Christmas eve. Where are the youngsters?"

"Gone to bed like lambs," said their mother in a burst of admiration. "I haven't told them just what their Christmas presents were to be, but they are clever enough to guess, I suppose. I told them it was something to wear."

"How about dinner tomorrow? Got everything in that you need?"

"Everything," said Mrs. Tiddleberry, bending a flushed face over the evening newspaper she had just opened. "I told you this morning it would be the first Christmas eve you didn't have to do any shopping. Did you miss it, Henry?"

"Did I?" exclaimed Mr. Tiddleberry emphatically.

"So did I," admitted Anne soberly. "Doesn't seem like Christmas at all. I told the children to hang up their stockings."

"They might as well, I suppose," said Mr. Tiddleberry, rather gloomily. "If you hadn't forbidden me, Anne, I might have managed a few oranges or something. I believe I'll go out and get some now." He reached into the kitchen for his overcoat, but Anne slipped to the china closet and threw open the door.

"Wait, Henry! Look there!"

"Great smoke!" whistled Mr. Tiddleberry, and then he chuckled softly to himself. "Oh, Anne, Anne, how could you, when you forbade me to buy a thing?"

"I baked a half dozen Christmas plum puddings and sold them and made enough to get some oranges and nuts," blushed Mrs. Tiddleberry under his tender scrutiny. "I couldn't bear to have them find empty stockings."

"Is that all?" demanded her husband.

"Isn't it enough?" she evaded. "Come in the parlor and look at the coat and suit. I made a larger fire in the furnace and turned the heat in here so it would be warm when they got up in the morning."

"What else have you done, Anne?" persisted Mr. Tiddleberry. "Confess! I'll give you"—looking at his watch—"just three minutes. Fire ahead!"

Anne sank back in a big rocking chair and closed her eyes wearily. "Well, I found one of Linnie's old dolls and made new clothes for it from head to foot. It looks like new. Then I made her three dainty handkerchiefs. I had the material in the house, and I fitted a little workbasket for her. That's all for Linnie. I made Bob a bath robe."

"A bath robe! Out of what—paper?"

"I had an extra blanket, a small one, so I dyed it red and made a robe for him, using a curtain cord and tassels dyed the same color. That's all except the popcorn and candy. I never spent a penny for anything except nuts and oranges."

"It's enough, Anne Tiddleberry, and you were the exponent of the giftless Christmas! Good night, my dear. Go to bed. I shall sit up awhile."

"I'm afraid I've spoiled your Christmas by objecting to the presents," she said, with compunction in her tone, as she lingered by his side.

"Not at all, my dear. I wouldn't be surprised if this turned out to be the happiest Christmas we ever had."

For a long while after his wife had departed Mr. Tiddleberry waited in silence, and when he had quite determined she must have retired he tiptoed softly to and fro between the parlor and the hall closet under the stairs, his stockinged feet making no sound on the carpeted floor.

First he untied a package and looked with unstinted admiration upon a cotton crape kimono in gay tints of red and yellow, a pair of brown kid gloves and a book that his wife had longed for. He found a pair of stockings in her darning basket and hung one beside Linnie's, putting nuts and candy and a big orange in first. Then he stuffed in the kimono and the gloves and laid the book on the shelf above it.

Into Linnie's well filled stocking he dropped a tissue paper package containing a silver bracelet, and into Bob's there went a pair of skates. After he had solemnly executed a highland fling on the hearth rug Mr. Tiddleberry extinguished the lights and went to bed much pleased with his own shrewdness.

Later Mrs. Tiddleberry arose from beside her sleeping husband and crept down in the darkness to hang one of his socks beside Bob's. She heard him stirring and flitted back again without noticing any additions to the row of stockings on the shelf.

Just before daybreak Bob's door opened softly, and a ghostly figure made a journey down to the parlor and returned. It was not until the cold Christmas sun was peeping over the rim of the world and gilding Linnie Tiddleberry's bedroom window that the little girl stirred from her warm nest and timidly slipped down the stairs over the pricking carpet.

Just as she reached her bedroom door her father's voice roared in mock ferocity: "Merry Christmas! Who goes there?"

"Me," cried Linnie. "Merry Christmas, everybody."

That was the signal for all the Tiddleberrys to arise, for it was a Christmas custom with them that they should all go downstairs together on Christmas morning. Mr. Tiddleberry looked very complacent and self satisfied as he hurried into his clothes. His wife was beaming with some hidden happiness, while Linnie and Bob sat on the top stair fully dressed and giggling joyfully.

It was a solemnly happy procession that wended its way down the stairs that morning. "Remember, children," said Mrs. Tiddleberry, "I told you not to feel disappointed if Santa Claus did not remember you very bountifully this year. Perhaps he has forgotten you entirely. We are all so happy," she looked around at the little group, "that it seems as though we had every gift that Christmas can bring, health and one another and peace and good will."

"And lots of love," burst out Linnie.

"And the pleasure of working for each other," added Mr. Tiddleberry emphatically as he opened the parlor door.

"Oh!" cried Linnie delightedly.

"Oh!" echoed her astonished mother as she claimed her own stocking.

"Great smoke!" ejaculated Mr. Tiddleberry, feeling of his own dependent sock. "What's here, Anne? Wearing out your pretty eyes over a knitted scarf for me? And what is this and this?" He held two objects to view.

"I gave you the knife, and I want a penny so as not to cut friendship," shouted Bob from the folds of his bath robe as he strapped on his skates, "and I gave mother the hairbrush, and I made Linnie the doll house out of a soap box and some wall paper."

"And I gave you the pipe, father, and the perfume is for mother, and I knitted the toboggan cap for Bob out of my old sweater—I unraveled it," cried Linnie breathlessly.

Mrs. Tiddleberry was crying softly over the contents of her stocking. "I thought I was the only one who could sacrifice for the others," she said shamefacedly, but they all fell upon her with caresses.

"Bob," said his father, "how did you do it?"

"Sold my rabbits—didn't want 'em anyway," said Bob defiantly.

"I ran errands for Mrs. Mosher, and altogether I earned 45 cents," declared Linnie proudly.

"Anne, you made plum puddings," accused her husband.

"Yes, and there's one for dinner, with other good things," she said happily. "How about your, Henry? How could you afford it? Does your delay in getting home nights account for it?"

Mr. Tiddleberry nodded. "Been clerking in a bookstore nights to earn those things. Bully plan too. Guess I'll do it every year."

"This is the best Christmas we ever had," declared Bob enthusiastically as he flung his arms about his mother's neck.

"I guess it must be because we all love each other so much," said Linnie sagely. And that was really the secret of the whole affair.

The Thimble.

About 200 years ago a London goldsmith called Trotting made and presented to the lady of his heart on her birthday anniversary a thimble of gold, beautifully ornamented and chased, accompanied by a note which introduced the little contraption as a "token of my humble esteem which shall protect those delicate, fair and industrious fingers from prick and scar of needle head." That was the origin of the thimble.

Fate of a Duchess.

We have had excellent morals drawn from the substantial waist of the Venus of Milo for the admonition of the fashionable woman. But what can we say about the Duchesse de Mazarin, who (G. Duval tells us in "Shadows of Old Paris") "died in 1775 from tight lacing, although she had posed for a statue of Venus?"

"Lame Leg Well"

"I wish to say that I have used Sloan's Liniment on a lame leg that has given me much trouble for six months. It was so bad that I couldn't walk sometimes for a week. I tried doctors' medicine and had a rubber bandage for my leg, and bought everything that I heard of, but they all did me no good, until at last I was persuaded to try Sloan's Liniment. The first application helped it, and in two weeks my leg was well."—A. L. HUNTER, of Hunter, Ala.

Horrors of Bokhara.

The terrible deeds that once made Bokhara a byword are now prohibited by the Russian government. Prisoners are not permitted, for instance, to be dragged through the streets by galloping horses. Nor are they thrown from the top of the high tower called the Minar Katan. This was the usual punishment meted out to evildoers in the old days. Watched by thousands of spectators, the poor wretches were flung from that giddy height on to the flagstones beneath.

Bokhara has many chambers of horrors, unwholesome for western eyes to see and the description of which would certainly be unfit for publication. Perhaps the most horrible of these is a pit where prisoners were tortured by vermin, which were so numerous and ravenous that in the absence of human prey they were fed on chunks of raw meat.—Wide World Magazine.

Disraeli and Goldwin Smith.

It may have been partly by suspicion of my possession of an unpleasant secret that Disraeli was moved to follow me across the Atlantic and try, as he did in "Lothair," to brand me as "a social sycophant." His knowledge of my social character was not great, for I had only once met him in society. His allusion to the "Oxford professor" who was going to the United States was as transparent as if he had used my name. Had I been in England, where my character was known, I should have let the attack pass, but I was in a strange country, where, made by a man of note, the attack was likely to tell. I therefore gave Disraeli the lie, and neither he nor any of his organs ever ventured to repeat the calumny.—Goldwin Smith in McClure's.

Goblets.

Goblets with stem and stand like those we use today were employed in Troy 900 B. C. Among the valuable objects found by Dr. Schliemann was a golden goblet. Vessels of this metal were commonly employed in the service of the temples.

THIS ADVERTISEMENT is written for the benefit of those who have no interest in speculative or high-finance securities, but who are interested in investing their money in established and honestly-managed dividend-paying manufacturing companies right here in New England.

New England stands for conservatism, sound morals and solid principles of doing business.

Its wealth and prosperity are bound up in its successful and constantly expanding manufacturing industries.

Stocks of these companies have proved and are today one of the safest and best opportunities for investing money, particularly for those who have had the foresight to buy them when they were originally issued.

These stocks, when so purchased, return the holder not only six per cent. and often more, but a portion of the increasing wealth and prosperity of this country through the rise in market value from year to year.

The above table shows a few of New England's best manufacturing stocks, the par value or original cost per share, annual dividend, and approximate present selling price and interest return.

The great difficulty for the average investor is how to inform himself as to the best stocks to buy and where to buy them.

I am a specialist in the best dividend-paying New England manufacturing stocks. The man or woman with one hundred dollars to invest has just as good a chance as the one with ten thousand. It makes no difference where you live you can do business with me by mail to your entire satisfaction.

From small beginnings six years ago, I have built up one of the largest businesses of selling by mail high-grade investment securities to small investors.

Two of the best New England Manufacturing Stocks to be bought today, in my judgment, are as follows:

The Uswoco Mills, of Lawrence, Mass., 7% Guaranteed Cumulative Preferred Stock.

The Uswoco Mills are leased to the United States Worsted Company, one of the largest and most prosperous textile manufacturing companies in New England. Present price $110 a share to net $6.36%. Send for Circular A.

The Hendee Mfg. Co., of Springfield, Mass., 7% Convertible Preferred Stock.

The Hendee Mfg. Co. are the makers of the well-known Indian Motocycle. This old-established company shows remarkable earnings. The convertible feature of this stock is very valuable. Present price $110 a share, to net 6.36%. Send for Circular B.

These two stocks are tax exempt in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

For those whose funds are not available immediately, I will carry these stocks a reasonable length of time without expense.

If you have $100, $1,000, or $10,000 to invest, call, write or telephone—Charter 2700 Hartford—at my expense, at once.

ALZINA'S TREE

The Momentous Part It Played at Christmas

By ELLEN P. BANKHEAD

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The red farmhouse was set in a white expanse of snow. The drooping elms protected the roof with widespread arms clothed in ermine, and where the crisp wind had blown away the covering the limbs were darkly sketched against the bright blue sky. A thin spiral of smoke drifted up from the big chimney and shimmered away into nothingness.

Close to the south bow window grew the sturdy graceful cedar that had been planted when Miss Alzina was born.

Alzina Tweed lived alone with her third cousin, the Widow Lasbury, who had no home of her own. Mrs. Lasbury was a very fat woman who ate a great deal and talked incessantly. Sometimes Alzina would take her sewing up to the chilly seclusion of her own bedroom in order to escape the tintinnabulation of her cousin's tongue.

The day before Christmas they sat before the sitting room fire sewing industriously. Alzina was knitting a pair of red mittens for the boy who brought the milk, while Mrs. Lasbury was addressing Christmas cards with a pen dipped in violet ink.

Suddenly the widow lifted her head and looked critically at her younger cousin. Alzina was fair and slender, and she had passed her thirty-fifth year, but her skin was fresh and unlined, and her gray eyes were clear and innocent as a child's. She wore a plain gray dress, and her brown hair was drawn smoothly back from her low white forehead.

"Alzina," said Mrs. Lashury ponderously, "I never thought you set much store by Christmas."

The other looked up inquiringly. "I don't know as I ever did, Eliza—not since I was a little thing. You see, we had lots of trouble when I was young. It seemed as if there was another empty chair every Christmas till they were all gone. Since then it's been a lonesome season."

Mrs. Lasbury coughed deprecatingly. "Seeing as you don't set much store by Christmas, I knew you wouldn't mind if I went over to Mrs. Beebe's to spend the day. She was second cousin to my husband, you know."

"Very well," said Alzina quietly, and her voice did not tremble, although a mist came into her gray eyes.

"'Tisn't as if you made much of the day. As I recollect, Christmas is like most other days here," complained the widow in self extenuation. "Over to Beebe's they have a Christmas tree and a turkey and lots of going ons. Maybe you'd like to go along with me, though you mightn't enjoy it, not knowing anybody over there."

Alzina smiled at the grudging invitation, and a dimple came into one cheek. "No, thank you, Eliza. I may as well spend the day as usual; you know we live so far away from neighbors we have got out of the habit of participating in their good times. I may walk over to church in the morning. I am sorry you've had such dull holidays here. If I'd only known how you felt we could have had a turkey and all sorts of good things to eat—only, Eliza, if you'll remember, you've spent every Christmas with Mrs. Beebe. I've always been alone."

"I don't remember," remarked Mrs. Lasbury vaguely, blotting the last card and putting the cork in the ink bottle. "I guess I may as well be getting ready, Alzina. Hiram's coming over for me at 5 o'clock, and I've got to get together the little things I've been making for the folks—and that reminds me I've got something for you too." She fumbled through the Christmas cards on the table and extended toward her cousin a gorgeously colored Christmas greeting. "With a Merry Christmas, from Cousin Eliza," was written across the bottom.

"Thank you, Eliza," said Alzina, with a sudden choking in her throat. "It is very good of you to think of me."

"Not at all, Alzina," returned the widow graciously. "I thiuk of you very often. Now, see here, what I've been making for the folks. You see, they'll expect me to remember them, seeing as I spend every Christmas with them. I bought this waist pattern for Sarah, and I made this muffler for Hiram. Neat, ain't it? Esther's been wanting a china cup of her own to drink from, and I got this down to the store."

"It's real pretty," said Alzina, scarcely seeing the gayly decorated cup through the blurring mist before her eyes. There was a homesick feeling at her heart and a dread of the coming lonely day. Mrs. Lasbury had cared enough to plan out gifts for these others. For lonely Alzina there was nothing save the card. Ashamed of the jealousy that had burned briefly in her heart, Alzina praised the gifts her kinswoman had prepared, and then just before the widow's departure Alzina tucked in her hand a little purse containing a five dollar bill.

"With love and a merry Christmas, Eliza," she said heartily.

"That's real thoughtful of you, Alzina," cried Mrs. Lasbury, quite moved by her cousin's generosity. "I most wish you was coming along to enjoy the Christmas tree."

"I shall have a Christmas tree of my own," said Alzina spiritedly.

Joy is more divine than sorrow, for joy is bread and sorrow is medicine.—Beecher.

Mrs. Lasbury stared. "For the land! What do you mean?" she demanded.

Alzina pointed toward the window where the feathery plume of the cedar branches tapped the pane. "That's my Christmas tree," she smiled bravely. "When the birds come tomorrow they'll find bits of suet and other goodies, and little Chip, the squirrel that lives in the hollow oak, will find a handful of nuts. Then there's the red mittens for Jimmie and a jar of mincemeat for old Mrs. Peterkin. Why, we'll have quite a merry Christmas here, after all. I wish I'd thought of it before." Alzina's cheeks grew quite pink, and her gray eyes sparkled.

"My land, Alzina, you're almost pretty," she admitted graciously. "They was asking down to the sewing circle why you never encouraged any company. There's plenty of young men would like to call on you, and most of them would like to marry you. I thought young Fred Pierson was quite smitten when he walked home from meeting. Well, you needn't look so mad, Alzina. Most girls would be glad to have him looking at 'em."

"Here is Mr. Beebe," remarked Alzina, turning from the window with hot, flushed cheeks. "I hope you'll have a lovely time, Cousin Eliza."

"I expect I shall," said the widow complacently. She bundled herself in a large cloak and tied a woolen shawl over her head. "I shall stop in the postoffice and see if my present has come from Elderville. Do you really mean you're going to have a Christmas tree, Alzina, like you said?" And as Alzina nodded assent Mrs. Lasbury tucked her double chin in the folds of her shawl and added condescendingly, "Well, I wish you joy of it."

When she was alone Alzina thought about the Christmas tree she had so bravely planned in Mrs. Lasbury's presence, and she tried not to remember that she was all alone and that her natural reserve had shut her away from the few friends she might have possessed. There was no one to remember her this lonely Christmas eve, and so she must try and remember the few people she knew. She tied a bright dime in each thumb of the red mittens and, wrapping them in white tissue paper, placed them in the milk pail outside the door. She groped down cellar for a jar of mincemeat and made it ready to take to old Mrs. Peterkin in the morning.

When she opened the pantry door to find some bits of suet for the birds she met a surprise. There on the broad shelves the conscience stricken Mrs. Lasbury had arranged two mince pies and a golden one of pumpkin. There was a small roasted chicken and a dish of cranberry sauce, besides several vegetables ready to be warmed up. The hot tears welled into Alzina's eyes.

"That just shows that everybody is better hearted than I think they are," she murmured as she closed the door on Cousin Eliza's mute but substantial offering. "I'm ashamed of myself when I think how much I'm missing of all the goodness just by being so narrow minded."

Before she went to bed Alzina read the beautiful story of the first Christmas, and, although she had read it before, it never held so much tender meaning for her as it did this anniversary of the blessed birthday.

She awoke cheerful and contented, and, while there was no Christmas greeting awaiting her from the silent rooms of the house, she resolved that when another year had rolled around the Christmas season would find a happy gathering under her own roof—the lame and the halt and the blind. Aye, she would find them in the highways and byways. There would never be another lonely Christmas.

When she opened the sitting room door she saw the tree. After her first start of amazement she stood silently looking through the windows at the beautiful sight. Somebody had shaken the snow from her cedar and dressed the branches with tinsel and strings of popcorn. Somebody had tied oranges and candy canes and popcorn balls to the stems, while there were several mysterious looking packages depending from the lower branches.

Alzina tiptoed out of the door and like one in a dream approached the tree. Her slender feet made deep tracks in the snow, and the morning sunshine turned her brown hair into a maze of gold. Almost reverently she touched the branches that bore the Christmas fruits, and then she untied one of the packages and slowly opened it. Inside was a dainty white apron with a Christmas card, "To Alzina from Sarah Beebe." There was another present from Mr. Beebe and one from Esther and a real present from Cousin Eliza Lasbury—a knitted afghan. Then there was a big box of candy from Fred Pierson's mother, and, lastly, a very tiny box hanging all alone.

When Alzina opened it she found a beautiful little turquoise ring, and in it was twisted a note from Fred Pierson himself. "If it's all right, Alzina, wear this down to the gate," he had written bashfully.

After she had wiped the tears from her eyes Alzina Tweed saw that all the friendly Beebes and Cousin Eliza Lashury were peering at her from adjacent points of vantage. "I never had such a good time in my life," panted Mrs. Lasbury as they gathered about her. "When I told Mrs. Pierson about it she and Fred wanted to join in, and so they did. If you'll give us some breakfast, Alzina, we'll take you back to Beebe's with us. Fred and his mother 'll be there, and—where are you going?"

"If you'll excuse me a moment," blushed Alzina, twisting the turquoise ring around her finger—"I've got an errand down to the gate."

Man the Brute.

"They do say," remarked Brown as he pushed back his chair from the dinner table, "that a woman's work is never done."

"And they are right when they say so," rejoined the wife.

"But what makes you think of it at this moment?"

"That shoulder of mutton!" replied Brown as he made a rapid exit.

The Natural Effect.

Father—From my observation of him last night I came to the conclusion that young man of your was rather wild. Daughter—Of course. It was your constant observation that made him wild. He wanted you to go upstairs and leave us alone.

Marriage Not a Failure

By REGINALD D. HAVEN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The old bachelors and old maids' matrimonial exchange, designed to bring together persons of opposite sex who had put off marriage to an inconvenient season and had therefore been left without homes in their old age, had been organized a year without results. Several of the male members had been married, but they had been captured by young women outside the society. At last Mr. Frederick Hornblower, aged fifty-four, and Miss Sophia Gilbert, aged forty-eight, both members of the exchange, who had met there for a matrimonial purpose, decided to marry.

The proposition had been made and accepted, and the parties met to consider the essentials of living together. Mr. Hornblower opened the conference.

"I think, my dear Miss Gilbert"—

"Do call me Sophia."

"I think, my dear Sophia, that I will have my house renovated throughout for your reception."

"Pardon me, Mr.—I mean Frederick, but I have been thinking that since your house is quite large—too large, in fact, for two people and requiring a great deal of care"—

"We needn't use but the first and second stories."

"The first and second stories! My dear man, how do you suppose we would feel living in a house one-half of which would be closed? My house, on the contrary, is very cozy, just the right size for us. And it is nearer your office than yours. Besides, there I have the little boudoir adjoining my bedroom where I have always kept Rosie, my parrot, and little Trip, my dog, and Charles, my monkey"—

"Good gracious, madam—I mean Sophia! Have you got a menagerie there?"

"Only these three besides my two cats. You see, I've been used to having them there. I call it the nursery, where I can keep them under my eye and where they can come trooping in early in the morning to awaken me."

"At what hour?" The expression on Mr. Hornblower's face was one of horror.

"Five o'clock usually. You see, I go to bed at 9, and eight hours' sleep is enough for any one. Indeed, some times when Charles is nervous I let him in at 4. Often he whines for me all night."

"And these pets stand in the relation to you of"—

"My beloved children. It would be impossible for me to move into another house, for their bathroom is attached to the nursery and very convenient. Each one of the children has a bath twice and sometimes three times a day."

"But, my dear—Sophia, doesn't that take up a lot of time?"

"Certainly, but what is time for except to care for those one loves?"

"But, Sophia, dear, all this is to be changed. You are to have something higher in the scale of animal life to whom to devote yourself to love. What time will you have to give to me if"—

"Oh, I never could love any one as well as Rosie, I'm sure. But tell me something of your life. Have you no pets?"

"Not one. I shall be able to lavish the whole of my affection on my wife."

"How do you spend the day?'

"I rise at 8. My morning sleep is my best and must not be disturbed. I breakfast on a steak and a baked potato every morning. There must be no change as to this. I will be at the office all day, leaving you the house to yourself"—

"And my family."

"Owing to the condition of my stomach I never eat anything for dinner except milk toast and a cup of tea."

"Indeed! Can there be no change from this either?"

"None whatever. Since my principal sleep is in the morning I don't close my eyes till midnight, but I need the rest and am in bed by 9. I lie awake till 12 reading and smoking."

"And do you expect me to be awake from 9 till 12 enveloped in your nasty tobacco smoke?"

"You can go to sleep."

"And not have my family come in at 5 in the morning, dear children, to awaken me?"

"The morning hours, I have told you, are most important to me to get the sleep I need."

"Then I suppose," said the lady after reflection, "we must occupy separate rooms?"

Mr. Hornblower sighed. One object he had had in getting married was to have some one beside him in those lonely hours during the night when he often lay awake. This part of his dream seemed ended.

"Do you think," he asked presently, "that we could come to a compromise?"

"Of course," replied the lady.

"Well, suppose I agree to go to bed when you go and relinquish my smoke. You in turn give up your pets."

"We might compromise on the first of those, but not on the second."

Mr. Hornblower looked at her curiously. Her countenance did not indicate anything unusual.

"You mean," he said, "that I give up my smoke and you retain your pets?"

"Wouldn't that be a fair compromise?" she asked, looking up at him innocently.

He thought a moment, then replied that it would.

They married and were happy.

Her Part.

"I understand that your wife collaborates with you?"

"Yes; her work aids me immensely."

"I don't believe I have ever seen any of her writings."

"She doesn't write; she prepares my meals."—Houston Post.

RHEUMATIC FOLKS.

Are You Sure Your Kidneys Are Well.

Many rheumatic attacks are due to uric acid in the blood. But the duty of the kidneys is to remove all uric acid from the blood. Its presence there shows the kidneys are inactive.

Don't dally with "uric acid solvents." You might go on till doomsday with them, but until you cure the kidneys you will never get well. Doan's Kidney Pills not only remove uric acid, but cure the kidneys and then all danger from uric acid is ended. The following testimony will convince the most skeptical Palmer citizen.

Thomas E. O'Brien, 54 Main St., Brookfield, Mass., says: "Cold and exposure, I believe, brought on my kidney complaint. I was in a miserable condition when I was advised by a friend to give Doan's Kidney Pills a trial. I was soon able to be back to work and I give Doan's Kidney Pills the credit for my present good health.

The Bird and the Man.

A country stable keeper was driving a salesman from one town to another when, in passing through a wooded section, the salesman seized the lines and brought the horse to a halt.

"What is that noise?" he queried, listening to a peculiar sound coming from the woods.

"That? Oh, that's a partridge drumming," replied the driver.

"Well," mused the salesman, letting go the lines, "I hope he's had better luck than I have today."—Boston Herald.

Thanksgiving.

The first national Thanksgiving may be said to have been the one offered up at St. Paul's cathedral, London, for the defeat of the Spanish armada, September, 1588. The English settlers in this country naturally adopted the custom of their native land, and at an early period in our colonial history Thanksgiving became quite common. The institution may be said to be the natural outgrowth of human nature and has probably existed in some form or other from the earliest times. —Exchange.

A Blackberry Craze

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Hawkinsville is a village in the shadow of a certain New England mountain. It is called the laziest place in its state, and rightly so. Ten years ago a stranger came along and gave it its deathblow, and in a rather queer way.

There was a tavern at Hawkinsville. There was little need of one, as very few strangers ever found the place, but there was one, and it was kept by a lazy man. There was a blacksmith shop, and its owner was lazy. It was the same with the butcher, the cooper and others. Laziness and contentment prevailed.

Just why this laziness should have irritated a traveler who rested at the tavern for a few days was a puzzle. He was not in the best of health, and he wanted peace and rest, but the laziness and serenity of others appeared to gall him. The weather was hot, and of an afternoon about 200 men would occupy the long veranda of the hotel.

It was about time for the blackberry season to open. The mountain sides and the fringes of the highways were thick with blackberry bushes, and the crop of berries promised to be unusually large that season. It was from seeing a freckled faced boy with a basket of berries on his arm that the stranger must have got his idea. The landlord was lazy. His son, who waited on the table, was lazy. The stranger called them into consultation. He first swore them to secrecy. Then he admitted to being a resident of Philadelphia and a wine dealer. He had invented a new champagne, and the basis of it was blackberry wine. He was up in that blackberry country to secure it.

The lazy landlord lazily figured, but his figures proved to him that he could make more profit in one day picking berries than running his tavern for sixty. Four dollars per day were his figures, and there were four of them to pick and press. The four started out next morning. Yes, they let some of their friends in on the ground floor. That was the reason why Hawkinsville got the blackberry craze. In two days it had everybody wild.

There is no man so lazy that he won't pick blackberries. The bushes are high, and you don't have to bend over. In some cases you can sit down and pick. All you have to do is to reach out a hand. You can fall asleep, take a refreshing nap and then wake up and go to picking again. The champion lazy men of Hawkinsville got a move on them. Four dollars a day and they could keep together and talk as they picked! The women went out. The children went out. Old grandfathers and grandmothers went out. A certain citizen who had been told that he would die within three days braced up and lived two weeks in order to give his family a chance to go berrying.

When about forty people are engaged in hunting the blackberry there must be results. They came in at night with full baskets and pails, and before they slept the berries were turned into wine and bottled and jugged and kegged. The champagne man was on hand to speak encouraging words. He even went out and did a little picking himself and turned over the berries to the widows and the fatherless.

One day a lightning rod man drove into the town. He had been there before. He knew how lazy everybody was, and he longed to throw strenuosity aside for awhile and mingle with them. No one on the tavern veranda—only a lame man in sight on the streets The town was dead.

"Yaller fever?" he asked of the lame man.

"Nope."

"Cholera?"

"Nope."

"Smallpox around?"

"Nope."

"Then what does this mean?"

"Blackberries and $4 a day."

When the lightning man had heard the full particulars he shut one eye and held it closed for a long minute before saying:

"Jest so; jest so. Blackberry boom. Blackberry champagne. Blackberry stranger Well, it ain't any of my funeral. If a town is bound and determined to kill herself it won't do no good for one man to talk."

"What's the matter?" asked the lame man.

"Oh, I ain't wanting to interrupt the fun, but lemme ask you if you ever heard that champagne was made of blackberries?"

"I never knowed how it was made."

"Well, mebbe you'll find out. When the inhabitants come back tonight jest tell 'em I was here and when I heard about the champagne business I winked my eye—the left eye. Tell 'em I never wink that eye unless there's something doing."

It was the last of the blackberry season. The bushes had been stripped for four miles around. On the last day of picking all the green ones had been taken as well. The pickers came back to find the champagne man gone. They came back to learn what the lightning man had said. They clung to their faith for a week, and then they decided that they had been cadoodled. Then they called a public meeting and "resolved that every durned critter in the town of Hawkinsville be lazier than ever to make up for this hoom."

And that's why there have been no funerals in the town since. The people are too lazy to die.

The Mean Thing.

"Phyllis is the meanest kind of a gossip."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because she never tells you anything herself, but gets you to tell her all you know."

A Poor Plan.

The trouble with some men who reach the top is that they go right on over and down the other side.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Parting Shot.

Cabby (badly worsted in the dispute)—Well, I 'opes as the nex' four wheeler ye tikes, mum, will be an 'earsel—Punch.

A Modern Shipwreck.

In an account of the wreck of the sailing ship Carnarvon Bay on King Island, Australia, it is related that when the vessel struck the captain calmly took a cigar from his pocket, bit the end off and lit it before ordering the boats to be launched. Even this display of lack of fear did not entirely prevent some degree of panic among the men, however, and seven men pushed off in the port lifeboat, leaving twenty-two to scramble into the starboard boat. In spite of the captain's orders the men in the port boat refused to come alongside, and those in the starboard boat shouted that if they did not put off the masts would fall on them. Instead of hurrying to the boat the captain strolled to his cabin and collected his papers. After he had entered the boat he transferred five men to the port boat and made for Tasmania, 100 miles away. He and the mates steered in turn, while the men bailed with empty biscuit tins, and forty-eight hours later both boats reached land.—Chicago News.

Oddities of Cecil Rhodes.

He possessed few intimate friends, and not even to all of them did he disclose his hand. Mere acquaintances disliked his moody silences, varied with fits of rather boisterous fun. They considered him exclusive, morose, rough and overbearing. And it must be admitted that he was a good hater, violent when thwarted and at times blunt to the point of rudeness. It is difficult to be sufficiently unconventional to shock a mining camp, but he shocked it. In dress he was almost disreputable. He seldom took pains to ingratiate himself with any one, and a man who too openly scorns his fellows must expect to suffer social ostracism and to have his character traduced. It would be idle to deny that for a time there were unfavorable rumors in circulation regarding him or that he was in many circles unpopular. But, like Galileo, he "cared for none of those things."—Sir Levis Michell.

An Eccentric Bishop.

Bishop Wilson of Calcutta had as housekeeper a venerable lady who remembered the duel between Sir Philip Francis and Warren Hastings on Aug. 17, 1780. On entering the cathedral on a Sunday morning, fully robed, lawn sleeves and all, and passing the pew where the old lady sat he would pause and give her the "kiss of peace" before all the congregation, and this although he had met her at breakfast.

His sermons, too, were racy. Preaching against dishonesty, especially in horseflesh, as one of the great English failings in India, he went on, "Nor are we, servants of the altar, free from yielding to this temptation." Pointing to the occupant of the reading desk below him: "There is my dear and venerable brother, the archdeacon, down there. He is an instance of it. He once sold me a horse. It was unsound. 'I was a stranger, and he took me in.'"

Scientist Who Couldn't Light a Fire.

Lord Kelvin, like Lord Morley, once amused a Scottish audience with a display of ignorance. At a lecture in Edinburgh, with Lord Kelvin in the chair, the Duke of Argyll was taken suddenly ill. "When the aged peer was carried down to one of the anterooms," said a local paper, "one of the first things to be thought of was the lighting of a fire, and this task was tackled by the duke's host, Lord Kelvin. But instead of placing some paper in the grate and some wood on that in the orthodox manner he amazed the onlookers by desperate efforts to kindle a handful of sticks at a gas burner. Ordinary mortals may be pardoned for taking some satisfaction in the fact that even so great a philosopher as Lord Kelvin did not know how to light a fire."

"Does Marie expect to marry the count?"

"Not immediately. There are three questions to be settled first."

"What are they?"

"He must prove that he is a count."

"Well, that would settle it, wouldn't it?"

"No. He must also prove that he isn't married."

"Well!"

"Then he must prove that he wants to marry Marie."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Parnell.

I never saw a braver man than Parnell. The story of his downfall is one of the most pathetic in history. There is a rumor that Captain O'Shea said to Gambetta: "What are we going to do with Parnell? He is getting to be a great danger to the country." And Gambetta replied, "Set a woman on his track." And the woman, instead of betraying him, fell in love with this patriot, and that was his undoing.—"Recollections of Mrs. T. P. O'Connor."

To Discourage Him.

"George," said her husband's wife, "I don't believe you have smoked one of those cigars I gave you on your birthday."

"That's right, my dear," replied his wife's husband. "I'm going to keep them until our Willie wants to learn to smoke."—Chicago News.

Confused.

"She hasn't any confidence in her husband, has she?"

"No. She caught him telling the truth the other day, and now she can't dope him out at all."—Toledo Blade.

No Clock Wanted.

There had been some talk of placing a clock in the tower of the village church. But John, the old sextou, who lived in the little cottage opposite the church, declared himself "dead agin it" and expressed the opinion that it would mean "an awful waste o' brass" were the scheme carried out.

"We want no clocks," he said the other day. "We've done without clocks up to now, an' we shall manage. Why, lyin' I' my bed of a mornin' I can see the time by the sundial over the porch."

"Yes," replied one who approved of the scheme, "that's all right so far as it goes. But the sun doesn't shine every morning. What do you do then?"

"Why," answered John surprisedly, "I knows then as it ain't fit weather to be out o' bed, an' I just stops where I is."—London Tit-Bits.

What Did He Mean?

"Have you noticed, my friend, how many fools there are on earth?"

"No. And there's always one more than you think."—Sourire.

Had an Attachment.

Agent—Madam, have you a piano? Housewife—Yes. Agent—I am selling an attachment which I am sure—Housewife—We have one. Agent—What make is it? Housewife—Sheriff's.—Cleveland Leader.

The Secret of Health.

A physician informs us that the best cure for sickness is to keep well. Some way or other this had long been suspected, and it is a joy to have it confirmed by expert authority.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Not Needed Below.

"This is a funny ship."

"How so?"

"They have no clock in the cabin."

Statesmanship.

"What is the most valuable knowledge that a statesman can acquire?"

"The knowledge," replied Senator Sorghum, "of when to change his mind."—Washington Star.

RESCUE OF NO AVAIL.

Three Rivers Boy Dies After Taken From River.

BROKE THROUGH ICE ON WAY HOME.

Joseph Noga, son of Martin Noga of Three Rivers, died about 8 o'clock last evening from the effects of an immersion in the Quaboag river yesterday afternoon by breaking through the ice.

School had just closed, and young Noga, a lad about seven years of age, started to cross the river on the ice instead of by way of the Main street bridge. When under the bridge he broke through the thin ice and dropped into the water. His cries were heard by Joseph Bothwell, station agent for the C V. railroad, who secured help and went to his rescue. A long ladder was procured, and on this Charles Tracy crept out and seized the clothing of young Noga. He had started to go down for the third time, but his coat caught on the ice and enabled Tracy to secure a firm hold The boy was taken at once to Keith's drug store, and Dr. C H Giroux, who happened to be near, worked hard over him for an hour before life was fully restored. The boy was then taken to his home and appeared none the worse for his experience. He was seen by Dr. Giroux at 7 o'clock and was apparently all right then, but about 8 o'clock suddenly collapsed and died. The body was viewed by Medical Examiner Schneider.

How to Make Better Times.

Monson Man's Pronounced Views on This Important Subject.

Editor Palmer Journal:—

I understand the Y. M. C A. of Springfield are going to take up the subject of teaching foreigners how to become good citizens. This is very commendable, but they will only reach a few. If they would investigate the condition of the foreign population as it exists at the present time in and about Springfield I think they would find many things that are not conducive to good citizenship. Many of them live in crowded tenements; they have large families and they get their children from the schools to the mills just as soon as possible. Then they keep coming; last year ending June 30, 1910, there came to this country 1,198,000. This keeps the ranks of the large army of the unemployed full all the time. Another thing about this immigration is that many of them would be better off if they had remained at home.

An editorial in the Springfield Evening Union of Jan 13 deplores the fact that other countries are getting the best of the immigration because they make a special effort to do so. I don't see why the United States should interest itself in the immigration one way or the other unless it is to put a stop to it. One thing sure, the immigration coming to this country will never be any better. The government is letting in Hindoos now. This editorial puts me in mind of a story. A man one day came to a ferry and says to the ferryman, "How is business?" The ferryman says, "Don't you see, the river is dried up and everyone is going over dry shod?" "Oh, well," the man said, "You need more ferry boats" This story illustrates the present condition of the country. In a few weeks 20-to 30,000 cotton workers will be out of employment, to last six months—wholly or in part; 10,000 more to be idle in and about Philadelphia in the Morocco and kindred trades. The Union Relief Association of Springfield is having an unusual demand made on it for help. Under these conditions we need more immigration about as much as the ferryman needed more ferry boats. The trust corporations employ just as little help as possible. Now, what is to be done? Dissolve these large corporations, not by order of the courts but by an act of Congress. Make them eliminate all common stock. This in most cases is capital locked up; it pays no dividends and has only a speculative value. Cut off immigration for five or more years. This arrangement will equalize the supply and demand. Our markets will be improved and the whole country will prosper as never before.

Death of Brimfield Citizen.

Arthur B. Brown, a Native and Life-long Resident, Aged 63.

Arthur B Brown, 63, a leading citizen and prosperous farmer of Brimfield, died of pernicious anemia at the Wesson Memorial hospital in Springfield on Friday of last week, after over a year of failing health. A year ago the present month Mr. Brown passed through a critical illness with pneumonia, and though he recovered so as to get about the town again, he had been able to do very little work since that time. He had been treated by leading physicians in Boston and Springfield, and there had been periods of apparent improvement. Only very recently within the three weeks since his removal to the hospital the fatal nature of the disease manifested itself.

In the death of Mr Brown, Brimfield sustains a loss that is generally and deeply felt, and he will be missed also in neighboring towns, where he had had business dealings for many years. He was highly esteemed as a neighbor, a successful farmer and as one always to be relied on in matters of public interest with which he was connected He had efficiently served the town as selectman, having filled that office from 1894 to 1899, and during the years 1908 and 1909, when the condition of his health made him unwilling to serve longer. During these periods of office he was much of the time chairman of the board. Mr. Brown had been deacon of the Congregational church since 1897 and a member of the parish committee since that time and has been one of the substantial supporters of the church. He was a charter member of the local grange, organized in 1897, and had held the office of treasurer from that time until last year, when he was unable to serve longer Good judgment, staunch integrity, a friendly and accommodating disposition were manifested alike in public affairs, in private dealings and neighborly relations. His family life was marked by unfailing consideration for others and unselfish devotion to those dependent upon him.

As a farmer, Mr. Brown's comfortable prosperity was pointed out as demonstrating what can be done on a New England farm—even along old lines—by close industry, thrift and good calculation. Mr. Brown also found opportunities for travel and had visited distant sections of the country.

Arthur Billings Brown was born in Brimfield August 5, 1847, and had spent most of his life on the place of his birth. He was the son of James Henry and Ann (Holbrook) Brown, and was of the fourth generation in the line of descent from Jonathan Brown, who moved to Brimfield in 1739 and who was prominent in town affairs and in the events preceding the Revolution, in which he served as one of the Minute men.

Mr. Brown was educated in the town schools and the Hitchcock Free Academy. He was married November 5, 1874, to Miss Cynthia R. Blashfield of Brimfield, who died in 1883—leaving two children, Ida M. and Clarence B. He was married February 15, 1888, to Miss Emma M. Agard of Brimfield, who survives him Besides his widow, he leaves a brother, John W., a sister, Sarah, the wife of Miner Corbin, both of Brimfield, his son, Clarence of Brimfield, and his daughter, Ida, who lives in Sturbridge and is the wife of Charles H. V George. The funeral was held in the Congregational church Sunday afternoon. Rev. William Jennings officiated, and his discourse was based on the passage from the 38th Psalm, "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way." In his remarks Mr Jennings paid a tribute to Deacon Brown's character as shown by the esteem in which he was held throughout the town and the confidence placed in him as officer in the town, church and local organizations. Mrs Williams, the wife of Rev. Charles W. Williams of Palmer, sang two selections, "Sometime We'll Understand," and "No Night There." There were numerous beautiful flowers, including a tribute from the church and citizens and from the Brimfield Grange. The bearers were Edward B. Brown, Orrin Hicks, Orus E. Parker, Charles S Tarbell, George W. Sherman and John H. Noyes.

SPECIAL TOWN MEETING.

Overseers of Poor Need More Funds to Pay Bills.

TOWN'S CONTINGENT FUND ALSO LOW

Carpet Mill Sewer Matter Again. Meeting Will Be Held Saturday Of Next Week.

The selectmen have called a special town meeting for 2 o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, Feb. 4 The necessity for the meeting is the announcement of the overseers of the poor that they will need from $1200 to $1500 more in order to meet the bills of the year In what departments the money is needed will doubtless be made clear at the meeting.

The selectmen will at the same time ask for an increased appropriation for the contingent fund, that having become exhausted because of the large amounts paid out in the spring for fighting forest fires These bills are always an unknown quantity, and last spring were unusually heavy.

The question of the carpet mill sewer will be brought up again under a request for authorization of a survey and preparation of plans for the construction of the work. The matter has been before the voters in the past, but in the absence of definite plans action has always been postponed If plans are authorized now, the question of cost can be determined and intelligent action be taken at the annual meeting This is a section of the town which is in need of attention in this line, though what disposition can be made of the sewage is at present an unknown quantity. The Quaboag river is the natural place for the outlet of the sewer, but whether the state board of health will allow sewage to be emptied into it to flow past the village is not known.

"Education, Old and New."

Interesting Address Before Men's League By Former Palmer Boy.

Those who did not attend the meeting of the Men's League in the Congregational church Wednesday evening missed a rare treat in the address of Rufus W. Stimson, director of the Smith agricultural school of Northampton. Mr. Stimson is a Palmer boy, and in his opening remarks gave Palmer and her citizens a full measure of credit for assisting him to attain his present position in the educational world.

Mr Stimson's subject was "Education, old and new." Education, he said, is undergoing important transitions. It began with the infant and continued as long as possible, and with many may never cease. We are inclined to overestimate what books do for us and underestimate what may be learned from experience and life itself People cry out against the so called fads and fancies of the present day and lament the lack of the three R's of the old education, but the speaker doubted if any parent of the present day would care to have his child taught according to the method of the old New England Primer, which was once considered almost as sacred as the Bible, and in support of his contention read examples from a copy of that famous book. It was early found that the child itself must be taken into account, and text-books underwent a change. Education as a whole has changed materially, in subject-matter and methods. In our grandfather's attic are the spinning wheels, the cheese presses, butter workers, etc, which gave the manual and industrial training of a few years ago Environment is different now, and the boys and girls have no opportunity to train themselves in these things.

The next change in the schools brought reading, writing, arithmetic and spelling, followed by history and that by geography, the two latter because of increased immigration and our growing commerce. Next came the demand on the high schools to prepare pupils for college, and there is just criticism that they do not prepare for the ordinary walks of life—there is too much "culture" or classical training Of later years vocational training has secured a foothold, and there is now both vocational and industrial training in many schools in the state. Either—culture or vocational training—needs something of the other to produce best results. There are now 40,000 boys and girls in Massachusetts between 14 and 16 years of age who have left school and are working at "dead end" jobs—jobs which pay a few dollars a week but are not lasting, and must soon be given up for something else, and attention was called to the wasted energy of this 40 000, when they might be learning something which would be of lasting value not only to themselves but to the state as a whole, in the way of a trade or vocation. The state is trying to do something for these, and is willing to pay half the cost of instruction in manual training by contributing toward the expense of teachers in schools where such courses are established. If an existing high school will start an agricultural course the state will pay two-thirds of the instructor's salary. Such a course has been planned to cover four years and give the student a knowledge of about all the processes of farming hereabouts. Instruction is given in the school of things to be done, the student getting the actual practice at home.

The speaker professed great faith in the efficacy of this means of salvation for the rural districts of New England. There is right here in Massachusetts ignorance, inefficiency and poverty which might be turned into dollars in the bank and the pockets of individuals if the latter are willing to work for them—but they must be workers, not loafers in order to succeed.

Mr Stimson's talk has a special interest for people of this vicinity in view of the recent report of the State Board of Education to the Legislature relative to agricultural education. In addition to recommending that agricultural departments be established in existing high schools with state aid, a section of the report is as follows:

"1. We recommend that state aid, equal to that granted any town, or group of towns constituting a district, for industrial schools, be continued as at present provided for in the case of any town, or group of towns constituting a district, for the establishment and maintenance of an independent agricultural school.

"2. We recommend that provision be made for the establishment of agricultural departments in existing high schools, with state aid, and with rigid definition and enforcement of vocational standards.

"3. We recommend that the above provisions shall be considered to be sufficient for meeting the needs of Worcester, in common with those of all other parts of the commonwealth, and, therefore, to obviate all necessity for special legislation on behalf of that city."

In discussing the possible locations for agricultural schools, the committee calls attention to the fact that the home markets for Massachusetts farm products are confined principally to 33 cities, which lie in six distinct groups. In Western Massachusetts, Great Barrington, West Springfield and Palmer are suggested as desirable locations for the establishment of vocational agricultural departments in existing high schools, and in this connection the board has the following to say of Palmer:

"3. Palmer might be another desirable center. This is a town of about 8000 inhabitants, and is made up of several villages. It is an important transportation center, being intersected by several steam railway lines and served by numerous electric car lines radiating from Palmer village as a center. A large farming area might thus be readily accommodated.

"Across the river from the village is a very large state institution, with extensive farms and varied farming operations. Much help is there employed, and practical work might there be had by boys from village homes who desired to be trained for farm life and work. The superintendent of this institution has expressed great interest in the possible establishment of an agricultural department in the Palmer high school, and might be relied upon to do everything possible for enhancing the value of its practical instruction.

"Palmer has three outlying manufacturing villages, in each of which the mill property includes farming land. The agents of the mills have expressed considerable interest in the possibility of an agricultural department in the Palmer high school. One of them would contribute forestry demonstration work; the others would render any assistance which might be found practicable"

PALMER NEWS.

Markers For Soldiers' Graves.

Committee Appointed by Town Will Make Partial Report.

At the last annual town meeting a committee was appointed to procure official markers for the graves of the soldiers of the Colonial and Revolutionary wars and the War of 1812 They have, after considerable correspondence with the officials of the Sons of the American Revolution, succeeded in obtaining those for the Revolutionary soldiers. It was necessary to secure a list of the men with the record of their service, and this was a difficult task The markers are of bronzed iron, and bear the letters "S. A. R., 1775," on a Greek cross encircled by a wreath, with the figure of a minute man and 13 stars on a circle in the center The cross is 11½ inches in diameter and the marker is 38 inches high.

The design for the marker for the soldiers of the Colonial war was adopted April 19, 1909, but they have not as yet been placed on sale. The price for these will be far above the others and the appropriation will scarcely permit of their purchase

The procuring of the markers for the soldiers of the War of 1812 is also delayed with an equal amount of red tape, but the record of their service is difficult to procure. While many of them are known to have seen service, their regiment and the company are unknown. It is likely the committee will ask for further time in the last two cases.

In the cemeteries of Palmer are the bodies of 14 men who served in the Colonial war, 30 who were in the Revolution and 10 who are known to have fought in the War of 1812.

Thought There Was a Fire.

And There Was, But Not a Serious One, And It Was Soon Out.

Sleepless residents along about 2 o'clock Sunday morning heard a number of blasts on a deep whistle which sounded like the fire whistle at the wire mill, but as no bell sounded they concluded that they were mistaken or that the Monson fire whistle was blowing, and turned over and went to sleep again—if they could. The whistle was for a blaze at the wire mill, the night watchman discovering a fire in a pile of rubbish near a platform at the rear of the mill, where hot ashes had been dumped a while before. There was a quantity of combustible material in the ashes, and they started a brisk blaze The watchman tried to pull the mill box by hand on the whistle, but got rather mixed. Chief Summers heard the whistle and tried to get the mill on the 'phone but failed; then he and Night Officer Crimmins made a trip to the mill, only to find that their services were not needed.

Married Two Months Ago.

Palmer Couple Make Their Wedding Known a Few Days Ago.

Miss Ruth Hazel Burgess, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Burgess of "Sunnyside" Farm in the wire mill district, and Mr. Frederick G. Lindstrom surprised their many friends in this town and vicinity this week by announcing their marriage, which took place on the 19th of last November in Boston. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lindstrom are well known among the young people of the town. The bride was a member of the Palmer high school, class of 1910, and a graduate of the Bay Path Institute, Springfield, and for the past year had been stenographer at the Wright Wire Company's office. The young couple will leave soon for Worcester, where they will make their home until spring, when they expect to go on an extended wedding tour.

Horses Gnawing Trees.

Prosecutions May Follow Unless Animals Are Kept In Control.

Owners of shade trees in many parts of the village have made complaint recently to Tree Warden Keith of the gnawing of the trees by horses attached to delivery wagons which are left unhitched while the drivers are in the houses taking orders. In some places material damage has been done. Mr. Keith has notified the owners of the teams and will make no further move if the trouble is eliminated at once. If it is not, complaints and arrests may be expected. There is a possible penalty of $25 for allowing a horse to gnaw trees in this manner, which drivers—and possibly owners—seem unaware of.

Bail was furnished for an appearance in the district court yesterday morning, when the case was further continued until to-morrow morning, bail of $300 being furnished.

Palmer Mills Not Affected.

Vote to Curtail Cotton Output Will Not Be Operative Here.

There has been fear in some quarters that the vote of the Arkwright club in Boston last week to curtail the production of cotton goods one-quarter until the market improves might result in the mills of Palmer going on short time for a season. Happily there is no thought of such a move at present, though of course there is no telling what may develop before the summer is over. Inquiry at the Palmer Mill in Three Rivers elicited the reply that nothing was known there about a curtailed production in the near future. At Bondsville nothing had been heard of the matter, and the same was true at Thorndike. This assurance will be good news to a large number of operatives, as well as the people in general.

Firemen's Ball Big Success.

Largest Dancing Party Ever In Attendance In the Opera House.

The annual ball of the Palmer firemen last Friday evening totally eclipsed everything of the kind previously held In fact, it was the largest dancing party the opera house has ever seen, and that is saying a good deal. There were 130 couples in the grand march, and quantities of others who did not attempt that figure. The supply of programs—400—which has usually been ample, soon gave out, much to the disappointment of the managers of the ball, who had not expected any such attendance The music by the Worcester Infantry orchestra was good, both in concert and for dancing. The firemen will clear about $125 for their trouble.

Two old trees were cut down Wednesday on the Palmer-Wilbraham road, one being a big cottonwood tree near the residence of Herbert Calkins and the other being a Lombardy poplar near the Charles Calkins' place. Both trees were old landmarks The cottonwood tree was about 90 feet high and was four feet through at the butt; it was probably more than 75 years old. It was struck by lightning about 16 years ago and since that time had been slowly dying until it reached a state where it was no longer safe. The poplar, which was at the junction of the Monson and Palmer lines, about quarter of a mile further west, had been a familiar landmark for more than 50 years. It was so badly decayed that there was danger of it being blown over during a storm.

"Twelve Years in the South."

Rev. F. E. Jenkins, Formerly of Palmer, Tells of Work There.

Rev. Frank E. Jenkins, a former pastor of the Congregational church, was greeted by a large audience of his former parishioners and friends last evening at the regular mid-week meeting of the church Mr. Jenkins is now president of Piedmont College in Atlanta, Ga., and spoke of the work being done there under the title, "Twelve years in the South." He said in part:

The story which I shall attempt to tell to-night must necessarily be largely personal; but its purpose will not be personal, but to show something of the reasons why I am appealing to the North in general, and to New England in particular, for help to realize a vision of service for the South. The story will incidentally illustrate how thoroughly one may rely upon Providence when the line of action follows clear Providential indication.

It was twelve years ago last September that I left this place for Atlanta and entered upon my work there. The outlook from many points of view was anything but inspiring The church was worshipping in its chapel six or seven years after its church ought to have been built The enthusiasm of beginnings had passed, while that of larger growth had not come. The pastor who had recently left had gone to another denomination, with columns in the daily papers telling his view that Congregationalism could not succeed in the South, and announcing that as his reason for leaving it.

The Home Missionary work in the state of Georgia was in an apparently hopeless condition, and the Central church had withdrawn from it and from all official denominational connection and was really an independent church, calling itself "Congregational" The Home Missionary work in the country generally was unpopular throughout the South, and the Home Missionary Society was seriously considering the question of abandoning it. Each National Council presented a fierce fight on the race question in the South, internal troubles abounded in Florida,—the only state that had real Congregational development and a Congregational college In Alabama and Georgia were some 175 country churches with an illiterate ministry, ordained Congregational ministers in good standing, not five of whom could write the simplest sentence or spell the simplest word correctly. No educational institution that would help our work was open to them, and no training school for the ministry of any denomination was to be found in the whole series of southernmost states—many times the size of New England. For special causes the work in Texas had lagged and all development had disappeared, while our few churches were dying. A vigorous young pastor in Louisiana was leading a small development there. But everywhere else throughout the South was discouragement hordering on hopelessness. The congregation in the church to which I went averaged 75, while 125 was considered a very large attendance. Such was the outlook.

Slowly the Central Church came to the consciousness that there was a possible future for it. It came back into denominational connection; it began, hesitatingly, to talk of a new building; in four years it had courage enough to have plans made; it lost its courage, however, in the midst of the difficulties and was on the verge of voting not to proceed, when the pastor, in the midst of a sermon the Sunday before the vote was to be taken, surprised himself as well as the people by these words: "After all the plain leadings of Providence in the history of this church, and the plain fact that the church cannot succeed in its work without a new building, I pledge myself here and now that if this church shall undertake to build and be unable to pay for the building, I will preach a sermon announcing that I believe Providence is a failure and advocating the sale of this corner for a saloon." The statement sounds ridiculous, but the preacher has been told that he turned pale as he spoke it, and certainly some of the people did the same. The vote was taken, the church, with its large auditorium seating nearly a thousand, and its other rooms and conveniences, was built. The present church property is conservatively estimated to be worth $125,000, all entirely paid for, or the money in the bank for the last payment to the Church Building Society

The church itself has come to a place of prominence in the city and in the South. The middle of this month the pastorate became vacant and leading business men in the city of Atlanta came to the church with offers of cooperation to enable it to call a pastor from the city of Worcester, whose present salary is $5000 and a house, and to offer him no reduction in salary.

Twelve years ago educational institutions for our work in this Home Missionary field were a prayer only. They had not reached the stage of a dream of possibility for years to come. Within one year Piedmont College was established. This year it has its 27 teachers and 500 students; $100 000 endowment; toward $50,000 worth of property; a growing reputation; a wide constituency of friends; a budget of $22,000; and the consciousness that it is called to a great work and to great development

But this institution reached only a part of the problem How should ministers be trained to take the place of our illiterate ministry? All hands were full of work and burdens were already heavy, and there seemed no possibility of adding another. A member of this Palmer church sent me a check in a letter, telling me to use it in any way I thought it could best be used. I thought of those illiterate ministers scattered through the rural regions of Georgia and the suggestion came that this money had given me an opportunity to do something for them. I sent an invitation to each one to spend a month in Atlanta. I secured boarding places for them in the homes of the working people about our Berean mission. They came, and with the help of two or three others we held three sessions daily—from 8 to 12 in the forenoon, from 2 to 5 in the afternoon and from 7.30 to 9 30 in the evening. Talks were given on the books of the Bible, the organization of the church, of a Sunday school, of a Young People's society, missionary work, church history, sermon making, pastoral work, letter writing, envelope addressing, and so on. These men soon became excited and said, "We never heard of anything like this; we ought to have something of this kind in Atlanta all the time for the training of ministers."

We had not planned for a theological seminary, but its organization could not be stopped; it fairly organized itself. And although it was not a dream of possibilities twelve years ago, its graduates are working in Georgia, Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Wyoming, New Hampshire, Maine and Mexico. It has a property worth some $60 000, a library of 10,000 volumes. Its resident student body last year numbered over 40, with some 50 pastors studying by correspondence; thus being one of the larger seminaries, and its influence is rapidly extending.

Thorsby Institute, in Alabama, has been organized in the very center of our hundred rural churches in that state, and in a region larger than the state of Connecticut with no other institution of standard high school grade. The Latin-American Institute in West Tampa, Florida, opened its doors last fall and has $20,000 worth of property, $15,000 of which is paid. The people of West Florida are raising the money for ground and buildings for the Santa Rosa Academy, to be opened next fall. In the center of North Carolina an association of Congregational churches numbering five was organized last October; some of the results of the work of a graduate of Atlanta Seminary, in his second year only after graduation. The people there are raising money for the Carolina Collegiate and Agricultural Institute, to be under Congregational auspices, with the expectation that it will be opened next fall, in a field 175 miles square, in which it will be the only institution reaching standard high school grade.

The troubles in Florida have disappeared, the Georgia question has passed from the National Council, the denomination is harmonious throughout the South. The Southern Home Missionary work has become very popular in the North. New churches are starting in Texas. I helped the people of Texarkana to organize a church which, the moment after its organization, was the leading church financially and socially in that growing city of 25,000 I received into church covenant the first morning of its organization 199 members, and the 200th came at the evening service.

These changes have come within 12 years. A vision for the future has taken possession of my mind and others are joining me in seeing it. We see Piedmont College developed for a great work of education and social service for the million or more of mountain people that are its special field, and the many more scattered through the states of the South who are increasingly looking to it as their door of opportunity. We see it with new buildings, with better equipment, with a larger endowment, with a thousand or more students, with its extension work scattered through the mountains, throwing its influence into the cabin homes to transform them and the whole life of the mountain region. We see our schools for the whites in the South consolidated into the Piedmont system, which may eventually be called a university. We see a college organized at Atlanta as a part of this system—the leader in the life and thought of the South—with our theological seminary, schools of law, medicine and dentistry already organized, Piedmont and the various academies and institutes all a part of its outreaching work.

This is the vision of spiritual and intellectual leadership in the life and thought of the South. It is a daring vision, an ambitious one, if you please, but it is hastening toward realization. The increasing interest will give us funds for Piedmont College and eventual endowment, and by and by will bring the interest of men of large wealth, of the General Education Board, and of the Sage foundation.

I must get at present $8000 to complete the $22,000 of the budget of Piedmont; my daughter Helen must get the money for Thorsby Institute as she is doing, and then we must reach out for the means for larger development.

The twelve years of achievement have been years of foundation laying, and I believe we have the right to see the vision of the superstructure.

HAMPDEN.

Mrs. Delehanty entertained the Whist Club at her home Saturday evening. There were five tables. The highest scores were made by Mrs. H. H. Faulkner and Merton Higgins. Refreshments were served during the evening.

At the meeting of the Grange last Friday evening, five new members were taken in. An interesting program was given, consisting of solos by Miss Ada Green and William Foley, a reading by Mrs. John Flynn, a paper by Miss Johnson and a selection on the organ by Mrs. Marcus Gottsche.

The town of Hardwick is having the "Divil's own time" with the riches thrust upon it. A little more than a year ago Calvin Paige of New York left the town $155,000, a portion to be used in the establishment of a fair grounds and the income of the rest to be used in maintaing courses of instruction in agriculture and domestic industries. The first provision is a little embarrassing, as it is conceded that the town is too close to both Palmer and Barre to make a fair a profitable venture. Now the town proposes to buy land and erect buildings for the instruction required, but there is the usual controversy over location. It's not always easy sailing, even if there's plenty of breeze.

Boston Globe's Big Year.

By its great and solid growth since 1872 the Boston Globe has placed that city so that it ranks in journalistic circles with London, New York, Paris and Chicago. The average daily circulation of the Globe, selling at two cents per copy, last year was 183,720, and for last December the daily average circulation was 188,543 For the last year the average circulation of the Sunday Globe was 321,878, while for last December 330,817 copies were sold each Sunday.

The Globe goes into the homes of the substantial people of Greater Boston and New England, people with money to spend; therefore it is not to be wondered at that the Globe is recognized as the great advertising medium in this section.

This recognition is proven by the fact that the Globe's advertising receipts last year exceeded those of any preceding 12 months. Including all kinds of advertising, the Globe showed a gain last year of 586,831 lines over the amount printed in its columns in 1909, as it printed 7,922,108 lines of advertising. Its nearest Boston competitor printed 5,528,005 lines of such matter, while the next best showing of a Boston newspaper was 5,142,480 lines of advertising. These figures cover from January 1 to December 31, 1910.

In every large city the bulk of the small advertisements of the community appear in either one or two of its newspapers. The Globe last year printed 479,877 separate small advertisements of the "want" class, a gain of 19,412 over what it printed the year before, and 347,148 more than appeared in any other Boston paper last year. This was because results can readily be traced, and advertisers know they get results from the Globe columns.

According to the last national census, 1,423,439 persons live within Metropolitan Boston, making "real" Boston the fourth largest city in the country and the tenth largest city in the world. Boston is the center of the most populous and wealthy community in America, and in the Globe it has one of the 10 largest newspaper properties in the world. Just what the people in this great community think of the Globe is well shown by its circulation and business showing for the past year.

Monson News.

Monson Team Again a Winner.

The fine record of the Belchertown basketball team was smashed last night in Memorial Hall, when the local team defeated them by the decisive score of 77 to 10. The slippery surface of the floor bothered the Belchertown men considerably, but they were outplayed in every part of the game. They were unable to get a basket in the first half, the score in this period being confined to two points, which they made on free tries. Giffin played the fastest game for the home team, getting 16 baskets from the floor; for the visitors Austin was the star. The score:

Monson.	Belchertown
Faulkner, l t,	r g, Austin
Giffin, r f,	l g, Legrande
Durkin, c,	c, Spencer
Moran, l g,	r f, Shaw
Osborn, r g	l f, Fairchild

Score, Monson 77, Belchertown 10. Goals from floor, Giffin 16, Moran 10, Durkin 3, Faulkner 6, Osborn 3, Austin 2, Fairchild, Shaw. Goals from fouls, Faulkner, Spencer, Shaw. Referee, Dunsford. Time, 20 and 15-minute halves. Attendance, 325.

The sophomore class held a meeting Tuesday and decided to adopt the new plan of having a school pin instead of a class pin. The plan is to have the pins of each class the same shape, but the colors and the class numerals to suit the class. This not only makes the pin less expensive, but enables one to tell a graduate by the pin he wears.

The sixth division of rhetoricals were given Wednesday morning. Miss Ellis led with the high mark of 97, with Leahy close behind with 95. The program: "A Heavenly Guest," Miss Anna Savage; "Lord Byron to the Greek," Hall; "The Brave Peasant," Miss Peck; "The Brotherhood of Man," Massey; "Along the Potomac," Miss Harrington; "The Man with the Musket," Walter Pease; "The Great West," Granfield; "How He Saved St. Michael's," Smith; "Senator Lodge in Defence of His Record," Leahy; "Ballad of Carmilhan," Miss Ellis; "The Wreck of the Hesperns," Miss Fuller.

The winning streak of the Academy basketball team was stopped by the Connecticut Literary Institute team in Suffield last Saturday, after a hard fought game. The local team was forced to be contented with the small end of a 29 to 20 score. The team had been without the services of Coach French all of the week and it was considerably crippled, as Capt. Dunsford was not in condition to play. He stayed through the game, however, and played a fast game. Belfit was the star of the Connecticut team, caging the ball seven times. The Monson team lost on their failure to take advantage of the many shots that they had in the last half. The C. L. I. team plays here next Saturday and the local team is confident of a victory.

The Academy basketball team were defeated at the hands of the Wesleyan Academy team at Wilbraham Monday afternoon by the score of 43 to 13. The game was close with the exception of the last 10 minutes of the first half. In that period the Wesleyan team secured 28 points. For the first seven minutes neither team scored. In the second half the playing was of a classy order, Monson getting the better of the passing game, but they were weak at shooting. Dunsford and Smith were the stars for the local team and McKenzie and Pickles starred for Wesleyan.

The Monson seconds were also taken into camp by the Wesleyan seconds, by a score of 18 to 9. The playing of Snow and Pike featured for Wesleyan, and for Monson, Entwistle excelled. Haley was high man in the scoring, connecting for four double counters from difficult angles.

BRIMFIELD.

Chimney Fire—House Saved.

A chimney fire at the home of Arthur Stacy which caused the igniting of wood work in the attic, came near destroying another house in Brimfield Tuesday evening, but by the use of a neighbor's telephone, help was summoned in season to save the property. Mr. Stacy lives on the Brimfield road in Little Rest, on what was formerly the Orestes Blashfield place, and the first person to be summoned by telephone was Dr. Pearsall at the Sherman residence, who used his hand extinguisher effectively in and around the chimney. The quick time made in getting the new chemical extinguishers owned by the town on the spot although they did not have to be used gives the townspeople confidence in their practicability, as the distance of two miles was covered in about ten minutes.

WARE.

Ware Man's Sad Experience.

Daniel Healey returned last week from Philadelphia, Pa., where he has been in a hospital for 14 months. He underwent seven or eight operations on his right leg during that time and it is now nearly gone He fell in the drydock at Philadelphia, and the leg was first amputated below the knee Mr. Healey enlisted in the navy some eight years ago, and before the unfortunate accident, which ended his career as a sailor, had enjoyed a varied experience. Besides serving on a number of smaller vessels and on gunboats, Mr. Healey has been a member of the crew on four of the big battleships, Ohio, Wisconsin, Oregon and Georgia. On the last vessel, and as a member of Admiral Wainwright's staff he made the memorable trip around the world Previously on the Cincinnati he had been in the eastern seas, so he has been twice around the world in the service. He is an interesting storyteller, and his old friends are enjoying his tales of the sea, of the naval service and of foreign countries. Mr Healy has a wooden leg, and by the use of a cane can get around very well There is much regret that his promising career was so suddenly terminated

Death of Mrs. Harry Barnes.

The cause of the fire is unknown.

WARREN.

Special Town Meeting.

A special town meeting was held Saturday afternoon with a small attendance. Joseph G. Hastings was elected moderator. It was voted to accept the new layout of about 500 feet on South street in West Warren as made by the selectmen and filed with the town clerk on December 17. No damages were awarded the abutters, who are Warren Cotton Mills on both sides of the street. It was also voted that the selectmen should build the road and authorize them to contract with the Warren Cotton Mills of the Thorndike Company to do the work without expense to the town. This change is to allow the company to build an addition 140 feet long to the present cloth room and necessitates the moving of the company's office building to the west side of South street. It is hoped this will prove the forerunner to many improvements which the agent, Walter B Hall, has in mind for the better equipment of the mills.

Delaney—Knightly.

The marriage of Annie May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Delaney, and William T. Knightly of Holyoke took place Monday morning at 7 o'clock in St Paul's church, Rev. John P. Perry, George H. Ellis, R. Freeman Clarke, William F. Taylor and John J. Lycett.

"He Pressed My Hand."

Before he passed from human sight,
From earth to better land,
His soul was gath'ring up its might
To test the wings for final flight,
And then, "He pressed my hand."
Yes, pressed my hand, his airship manned,
And sped far down the blue
To join yon throng in glory grand,
To swell the song of God's command,
The song of hearts so true.

Some day I'll pass from earthly scene,
The summons God had planned;
My soul its harvest due must glean!
O Spirit, help to keep me clean!
"My times are in thy hand."
But when I reach that realm of praise,
By heav'nly breezes fanned,
And give Thee thanks for all my days,
And on thy Beauty Wondrous gaze,—
May I just press his hand?

A Life Picture

Two Who Began and Ended Friends

By H. D. CLEAVER

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Robert Spooner and Lars Gibson at five were going about with their arms around each other's neck; at twelve they enjoyed boys' sports together; at eighteen they conferred as to what field in life's work they should enter.

The bond that drew them together was a dissimilarity of disposition. Spooner was bright, impulsive, daring even to recklessness. He would easily fly into a passion and was quick to do penance for his acts while under its influence. Gibson was of a very equable disposition. His amiability was never seriously interfered with and seldom ruffled. These complimentary dispositions welded their hearts when they were children, and the affection born of their tender years was never permanently broken.

Both about the same time secured situations in different mercantile houses. Spooner was very quick to learn and endowed with great natural energy. The consequence was that he advanced rapidly. Gibson was slow in his motions, not over quick to understand, always willing to do what was required of him, patient to a fault and quietly persistent. During these early years of their career Spooner would confer with his friend, complaining of what he called the stupidity of those immediately over him, chafing because he found it difficult to make them understand that he discovered ways of doing things quicker, plainer, more correctly than they. Gibson would say:

"Be patient, Bob. Your natural ability will win in the end, whereas if you try to go too fast you may get a backset that you will be years in making up."

"I know you're right, my boy," Bob would reply. "You're always right about everything, but it's mighty hard to see things going wrong when a suggestion from me would right it and I not make the suggestion."

"How do you know they would appreciate it? And wouldn't they be liable to tell you to keep your place and mind your own business. If you were in their place would you listen to suggestions from them?"

"I listen to suggestions from them! Not much!"

"All things come to those who wait."

Bob Spooner could not help feeling himself a better man than his friend in everything except patience, gentleness, endurance. He did not expect Lars to make much headway in the world; indeed, he was ambitious to make a success for himself that he might share it with the man he loved. It was not long before Spooner broke away from his employers and set up for himself. He had no capital, but had a capacity for inspiring confidence. He succeeded from the start.

Both young men married. Spooner wedded a girl who saw in him a means to acquire what was the wish of her life—social prominence. Gibson married a girl who loved money for money's sake rather than what she could acquire with it. Mrs. Spooner spent all her husband's income. Mrs. Gibson exerted herself to prevent her husband from giving away all his family did not positively require. From the time of their marriage their wives stepped into their shoes and enacted the balance of their lives for them. No, not all; at the end they acted for themselves.

It was their desire that their wives should feel as warm a friendship for each other as was theirs. Spooner, with his natural enthusiasm, expected this; Gibson, with a certain longheadedness or horse sense, knew that it could not be. There was nothing to bring the two women together—indeed, there was that to drive them apart. Each wife was jealous of the influence exerted by her husband's friend. "It is singular," Mrs. Spooner would say, "how you can see so much in that dull fellow. You are more capable in every way." And Mrs. Gibson would say, "Your friend Spooner looks down on you; he considers himself vastly your superior."

Spooner made money so fast that the very rapidity of his accumulations accelerated his accumulative desires, just as a man owning an automobile that will do forty miles an hour desires one that will do sixty. One morning the newspapers announced the failure of a large and long established banking house. It was the signal gun for the opening of a commercial panic. The house of Spooner & Co. went down in the crash, and the head of the firm was obliged to take the benefit of the bankruptcy law.

For two or three years values shrank. Gibson, who had saved—or, rather, whose wife had saved—considerable money, saw an opportunity to buy property cheap and made investments which when the financial pendulum swung to the other extreme made him rich. Meanwhile Spooner was freeing himself from the wreck of his business and when he had done so found himself more than forty years old, without the physical energy of youth with which to make a new beginning and without a dollar of capital.

His old friend called on him and said:

"Bob, I can let you have $20,000 on a nominal interest and without security. I would double it; but, you see, my wife and children have their claim on me, and I don't feel that I have the right to do more."

Spooner grasped his friend's hand, but said nothing for a time, then told Gibson he would consider the matter. When Mrs. Spooner heard of the offer she advised her husband to accept it, but showed such antagonism to the donor that Spooner resolved to decline the loan, indeed, the sum was not large enough to put him on his feet as he wished, and he preferred to manipulate certain banks with which he had done business to raise twenty times the amount. He failed in this and was obliged to take a subordinate position in the employ of another.

Gibson was now very prosperous. He had never made money fast except during the recovery from the panic, when the values of the property he had bought expanded as rapidly as they had contracted. His wife set up a carriage and two or three automobiles. The couple purchased the Spooner home that Spooner might redeem it when again able to do so. But as time passed it did not appear that Spooner would ever be able to do so. Had it not been for the influence of Gibson's wife he would have yielded to his affection for his old friend and offered to deed the place back to him.

And now came one of those combinations of circumstances calculated to drive apart instead of weld together those who love. Robert Spooner as a young man had desired to accumulate partly that he might help the friend whom he looked upon as his inferior. He now saw that inferior in a position to help him. Had he been uninfluenced he might have stood the strain occasioned by jealousy. But Mrs. Spooner, disappointed in not being able to retain the grip she had secured on society, smarting at seeing the man whose influence over her husband she had disliked successful while Spooner was a failure, began a series of innuendoes against Gibson. These had no effect at first, but, being followed up pertinaciously, at last infected the subject on whom she worked.

Finally Spooner, seeing a rare opportunity, made a desperate effort to interest certain men with capital, succeeded and with one of these brilliant strokes for which he had formerly been remarkable made a fortune. As soon as Gibson heard of the fact he sent a note to his friend offering to sell him his former home at the price he had paid for it, which was about half its present valuation. But the poison was in Spooner's blood, and he replied curtly that the place would not now be commensurate with his altered fortunes.

From that time there was a continued effort on the part of the Spooners to flaunt their position in the face of the Gibsons—that is, on the part of Mrs. Spooner. What her husband did was inspired by her. But this Gibson didn't know, and he felt his old friend's antagonism keenly. The Spooners grew richer, and the richer they grew the more they snubbed the Gibsons. Mrs. Spooner's chief desire seemed to be to make them understand that while they had thousands the Spooners had millions and that there was as wide a difference in the social position of the two families as there was in their financial position.

And so it came that the two friends drifted apart. Both retired from business, and both were old men. Neither had any use for the money he had accumulated beyond a bare living. Whatever enjoyment there was in wealth was derived by their families. Friends had dropped away, and the old men were companionable with no one. One evening while Mrs. Spooner was entertaining a house full of guests her husband, letting himself out through a back door, walked into the street. He felt the desolation of a homeless man.

Passing a cafe that had been in the same location for half a century, where he and Gibson had in their youth met for a bite, a glass of beer and to talk over their affairs, he was seized with a melancholy desire to go in and sit in the old familiar seat. As he approached the stall he found it occupied by an old man. He was about to pass on when he heard his name spoken. Turning, he saw the veteran in the booth looking at him intently.

"Bob!"

"Lars!"

They sat side by side, as they had done when boys just entering upon their careers, remaining for a time hand in hand like two lovers. The past was not referred to.

"Lars," said Spooner, "here we are in the place from which we started, successful in the end and unable to enjoy the results of our success. The only marked effect it has had has been to separate us. What use was there in the struggle after all?"

"Without the interest we took in it we would have always been what we are today—men without life. Our children are enjoying it, or at least they think they are, but I doubt if their lives have the intensity in them that ours have had. We love our wives and them, but there is a different affection which they cannot supply—it is that which we feel for each other."

The place had run down since they were there as boys, but it was all they required. They met often during the remainder of their lives in that old booth, before which a curtain could be drawn to shut them from the view of others. One night a waiter, entering to tell them that the closing hour had come, found them sitting hand in hand, both dead.

Preparations For Mitten Social.

The ladies of the Willing to Help Club anticipate a large number at their mitten social on the 24th of February, and accordingly are getting a large supply of souvenirs ready for the occasion in the form of mittens of various colors. The mittens are to bear numbers from one upwards, and will be given out to each person attending, one of each pair to a lady and the other to a gentleman. Previous to the grand march an opportunity will be given to match up the mittens and so secure partners. To make the occasion an enjoyable one for all attending, good music has been secured,—Blanchard's singing and novelty orchestra of Southbridge, five pieces,—which will make their appearance in Palmer for the first time. The tickets for the social will be 35 cents and can be had of the members and their friends after the dance of the "Jolly Five," next Wednesday.

Narrow Escape From Injury.

Timothy Sullivan, employed by M. Sullivan & Sons, had a close call from a serious accident in the Wire Mill district in Palmer Tuesday. While standing on the front of his baker's cart getting wares for a customer, a heavy auto truck came from the direction of Springfield, and struck the cart, throwing it to one side and damaging it to some extent, in addition to scattering a portion of the contents upon the ground. The horse became scared and Mr. Sullivan's time was taken with the animal, so he did not secure the number of the machine, which did not stop but continued toward Palmer at a rapid speed.

Poe's Short Stories.

There are in the best of Poe's brief tales a constructive skill, a command of design and a gift of decoration rare in any literature and almost unknown in English, which is ever unduly negligent of form. And no one need wonder that Poe's short stories wandered swiftly out of our languages into French and Italian and Spanish, into German and Scandinavian and Bohemian, into strange tongues where no other American author, except Fenimore Cooper, had ever before penetrated. His weird psychologic studies have influenced later writers as unlike as Maupassant and Richepin, Fitzjames, O'Brien, Robert Louis Stevenson and Rudyard Kipling. His tales of a mystery solved at last by observation and deduction have been imitated by Dumas and Sardou, by Gaboriau and Bolsgobey, by Wilkie Collins and Conan Doyle. And Sherlock Holmes, the only fictitious character to win international recognition in the final years of the nineteenth century, is the reincarnation of a figure first projected by Poe.—Brander Matthews in Century.

The Word Derrick.

The word derrick for a machine used to lift heavy weights is curiously derived from a London hangman in the beginning of the seventeenth century whose name was Theodoric and who is often mentioned in old plays. "He rides circuit with the devil, and Derrick must be his host and Tyborne the inn at which he will light" occurs in "The Bellman of London," published in 1616. The name thus corrupted came afterward to be applied by an easy transition to the gallows and later still to any frame or contrivance resembling it in shape.

"Goodby, Harold."

"Goodby, Alice."

These, and those alone, were the parting words between Harold Rothwell and Alice Swain, for their hearts were too full to say more. They were to have been married within a few months, but Rothwell had developed pulmonary trouble, and it was decided that he should go west and live an outdoor life. The prospect before them was gloomy. Even if Harold recovered his health the giving up of prospects he was leaving might keep him in poverty and necessitate their continued separation. He turned away and set out for the railway station. Alice watched him till he reached a bend in the road, when he turned and threw her a kiss. She returned it, and he passed out of sight. Sad as they were, they would have been far more so had they known what would happen before they should meet again.

That same day two years hence found Rothwell financial manager for Henry Palmer, a rancher, though but just appointed to the position. Rothwell had long been a sheep herder for Palmer, and the out of door life had completely cured him of his ailing. As soon as it was considered safe for him to lead a more confined life Palmer, who had taken a great fancy to him and who needed a clerk, put him in charge of the financial part of his ranching. Then Rothwell wrote to Alice Swain that within another year he hoped to return for her and bring her back with him.

The ranch was not a large one, and the owner and his clerk were the only two persons engaged upon it except a few herders, who were always away in care of the flocks. The men became very warm friends and were almost constantly together. One day Palmer said to his clerk:

"You know, Harold, that I am a bachelor and have no one in the world to leave what belongs to me. I'm going to make a will bequeathing this ranch and the stock on it to you."

Rothwell smiled. "Considering that you are but ten years older than I and far stronger, I think I would better leave my possessions, if I had any, to you."

"Furthermore," Palmer continued without noticing the comment, "there are five $1,000 bonds, which will also be yours. These bonds, together with some old family trinkets, I have placed in hiding, and I am going to show you where they are hidden. They, too, will go to you at my death."

He led the way to the attic and from a recess formed by a corner in the roof between two joists took a tin box, opened it and showed Rothwell the bonds and the trinkets referred to. The latter consisted of a gold watch bearing the initials H. P. and some articles of jewelry.

"You are very kind," said Rothwell, "to make me your heir; but, as I have said, I don't think there is the slightest chance of my ever receiving my inheritance."

"There is a better chance than you think," said the other.

Rothwell looked at him inquiringly, but received no further confidence. Palmer replaced the box, and the two men returned to the lower story. Then Palmer opened a safe kept on the premises, took out a will, showed Rothwell that it was in his favor, put it back and closed the safe door.

"Why," asked Rothwell, "don't you keep the bonds and the other things in the safe?"

"I have a special reason for not keeping the bonds there. As to the watch and jewels, it doesn't much matter where they are kept. Some day you may learn the reason. So long as I live I can trust you not to disturb the box in the garret, and after my death what it contains may be of some benefit other than for their intrinsic value."

"To whom?"

"That will appear at the time."

This was not very satisfactory, but Rothwell was obliged to be satisfied with it.

It was but a few weeks after this that Rothwell, having got in some funds for the sale of sheep, rode to the town, some dozen miles away, to deposit the money in bank. The day proved an eventful one. On the way two masked men sprang upon him from a wood beside the road and robbed him. Returning to the ranch, he found Palmer lying in the living room of the house with a bullet hole in his brain.

As soon as he had sufficiently recovered from the shock to think he determined to ride to the nearest ranch, get a messenger and send for the proper authorities to come and take legal action upon the matter. Within a few hours an officer of the law arrived and took charge of both the premises and the body.

When Rothwell had told him the whole story of his connection with Palmer, concluding with the statement that he was Palmer's heir, that he had started for the bank that day to deposit some $1,200, been robbed on the way and returned to find his benefactor murdered, the official looked at him curiously. Then he called a messenger and sent him off posthaste. When the messenger returned he brought the sheriff with him, who, without a word of explanation, clapped a pair of handcuffs on Rothwell's wrists. The prisoner was taken to town and lodged in jail, charged with the murder of Henry Palmer and the embezzlement of the funds he claimed he had intended to put in the bank.

The case was one of circumstantial evidence—or, rather, of motive—alone. It was assumed that Rothwell had got behind in his accounts, had embezzled the amount of which he claimed he had been robbed and, fearing that if detected he would lose his inheritance, had killed the man whose property he would inherit.

This made a strong case against him, and there was very little to be said in his favor. No trace of any one having attacked Palmer and no evidence of Rothwell's story that he had been robbed appeared. The court retained charge of Palmer's property, but allowed the legatee sufficient funds to pay a lawyer to defend him. His attorney did the best in his power for him, but was unable to establish his innocence. The jury hung for some time between murder in the first and second degree, but finally brought in a verdict of guilty of the former. He was sentenced to suffer the death penalty.

And so it was that Rothwell, having escaped death from tuberculosis, having reached a condition where he might bring his sweetheart to him as his wife, was doomed to suffer on the gallows for a crime he had not committed. There are not the delays in punishment for crime in new countries there are where the safeguards against infringing on the rights of accused persons are more strictly enforced. Rothwell was sentenced to be hanged a few weeks after his conviction. No new trial was granted, no stay of proceedings, and the day of doom was near when something happened.

A young woman stood looking in through the window of a pawnshop in the town where Rothwell was convicted. At the time an officer of the law dressed in plain clothes was in the shop interviewing the pawnbroker about some stolen goods that he had loaned money on. The woman entered the shop and produced a watch on which she asked for a loan. The broker inspected the watch and at once caught sight of two letters, "H. P.," on the case.

"Whose initials are those?" asked the broker.

The woman said she did not know. The detective took a hand in questioning her and, her replies being contradictory, took her to police headquarters. There, after many surmises, some one noticed that "H. P." were the initials of Henry Palmer, for whose murder Rothwell was to be hanged in a few days. The chief of police put the woman through the "third degree" process, with the result of a confession that she had murdered Palmer.

Many were inclined to doubt that the confession was genuine. Had it not been for the fact that the woman had attempted to borrow money on a watch with Palmer's initials on it little attention would have been paid to her statement. She claimed to have been a discarded wife of Palmer's, and it was for this casting off that she had killed him. The watch was shown to Rothwell, and he told the police where he had seen it. This identified the woman with Palmer, she was charged with his murder, and Rothwell was released. He asked to see the person who stood in his place and was taken to her cell.

What was his amazement to recognize Alice Swain.

Before he had time to betray their relationship she gave him a look that put him on his guard. She then spoke to him as a stranger, telling him that if he could get permission to see her alone she would throw additional light on the murder. Permission was granted, and the two were left alone.

Not daring to embrace each other, they refrained. Alice talked about the murder, but, fearful of being overheard, said nothing to reveal the true situation. Meanwhile she scratched on a bit of paper:

This is a plan to save you. Luckily you wrote me of the tin box. I came, took the watch and pawned it to get arrested. Go away and I will convince them of my innocence.

It was agreed between them through the same medium that Harold should have a week before Alice revealed the trick. When the period had expired and he was safe in hiding she called for the lawyer who had defended him and told him how Rothwell had written her of the interview he had had with Palmer and of the tin box, showing him the letter—how she had gone to the hiding place, taken the watch and pawned it, knowing the man who was at the time with the pawnbroker to be a detective. The attorney soon obtained a dismissal of the charge against her, and later she was set at liberty.

She at once went to the ranch house and in her future husband's name claimed for him his inheritance. Making a more thorough examination of the contents of the tin box, she found a bit of paper on which were written the following words:

If I am murdered it will be by my old partner, Jacob Wilcox. When we separated I took some bonds that he claimed belonged to him. He told me then that he would have the bonds if he had to kill me to get them.

In time Rothwell came into his inheritance and married the girl who had saved him. He spent considerable money trying to find Wilcox and bring him to justice, but never succeeded. The Rothwell ranch is now one of the largest in that section of country.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill. "I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La. "For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PEYROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

What He Heard.

John is his name, and he lives in Newburg. Further personal details are not necessary. Now, John has a wife who is not as charitable as she might be, and she has a woman friend who has domestic troubles of her own and therefore can and does sympathize with John's wife. Just what time it was when John came in the other morning deponent knoweth not, but certainly it was no sort of time for a married man to be getting home, and his wife told him so, though he knew it perfectly well without being told.

Next morning after John had gone to his office his wife called up the other woman on the telephone and told about John. The other woman was all sympathy, and what the two had to say about the kind of husband John was was more than plenty. In the thick of it a friend of John's got on the wire—not intentionally, of course, for he thought John was a model, but he got there, and it sounded good enough to him to stay and listen. But not for long. Presently he coughed, and there was a sudden silence.

"Who's that?" inquired John's wife.

The Waste of the Wind.

Every one who wants a cheap motive force has tried to harness the wind. Every child has made a paper propeller or a windmill. But can it be said that the possible uses of the wind have been as arduously investigated as such recently discovered forces as steam and electricity and gases? Is it not conceivable that the practical uses of the wind are underestimated just because they are so familiar?

We cannot help thinking that the wind will be more variously employed some day in the same way that probably the problem of laying under contribution the great physical fact of the tides will be solved. One would think that the wind could be used for electric lighting, yet there is no practical apparatus for the purpose. True, the wind is variable and occasionally absent, but as electricity can be stored one might suppose that this was the very case in which variability did not particularly matter.—London Spectator.

He Wasn't Acrobatic.

Miss Prue Dent—Papa says you are improvident and that he will never consent to my marrying a man unable to make both ends meet. Orrville Harduppe—Well, I'm afraid I shall never be able to do so. I'm no contortionist. Good evening.

"Two bottles Cured My Rheumatism"

"I have been a sufferer from rheumatism for about two years, and have used many liniments and patent medicines which gave me no relief. A lady friend of mine told me she had used your Liniment and found relief at once. I got two bottles and they cured me. I think it is the best Liniment a person can have in the house. I shall always keep a bottle in my house as long as I can get it."—Mrs. E. R. Wallace, Morrisons, Va.

Another Letter.

Mrs. James McGraw, of 1216 Mandeville St., New Orleans, La., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing to you that I had a pain in my arm for five years, and I used for one week and was completely cured. I recommend your Liniment very highly."

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

Sloan's Liniment instantly relieves stiffness of the Joints, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Sprains, Neuralgia, Sciatica and Lumbago. Better and cheaper than porous plasters.

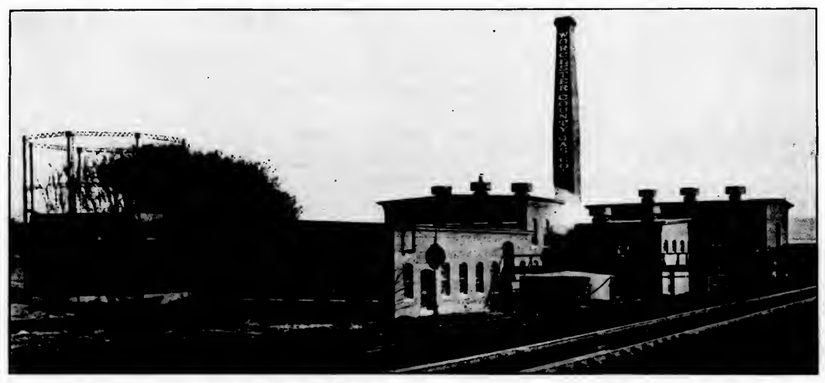
GAS PLANT IS COMPLETED.



Works of Worcester County Gas Co. Now in Use.

ON SITE OF HOLDEN & FULLER MILL.

Large Capacity, Which May Easily be Increased. Will Supply Numerous Towns.

With the erection of a substantial gas plant, which began active operation February 1, the town of Palmer now assumes the dignity of an important gas manufacturing center, being the distributing point for a score of miles around for the Worcester County Gas Company, of which Alfred Clarke of Boston is president.

This plant, which occupies the site of the Holden & Fuller woolen mill, burned a year ago next Tuesday, was built by the Light, Heat and Power Corporation of Boston, and is the culmination of an idea. For some time past it has become apparent to the officials of the Worcester County Gas Company that there were big possibilities in the extension of its mains, and study of the situation made it obvious that such extension implied the erection of a more convenient and capacious central station than that at Spencer, from which Palmer has been supplied in the past.

Fine New Plant of the Worcester County Gas Company at Palmer.

But the owners of the gas company are looking to the future. They see the opportunities awaiting the fruits of enterprise and are content to erect a plant on the most approved modern lines with possibilities of trebling its capacity when occasion arises, and to lay miles of piping to cultivate a demand for gas, which is already strongly manifesting itself, not only for illumination purposes, but also for fuel, since the gas range is indispensable in the modern kitchen.

The new plant will be the distributing center for Brookfield, North Brookfield, West Brookfield, West Warren, Warren, Palmer and Monson. Gradually the distribution will be increased, and in the early spring the mains will be extended to Three Rivers and Thorndike. They have already been laid to Monson.

The work which the Light, Heat and Power Corporation of Boston, which makes a specialty of gas and electric plant construction, has just completed, is attracting general attention from construction engineers. Situated on the Quaboag river with side track facilities on the Central Vermont railroad, the site is admirably located for the delivery of coal, and with the latest appliances installed for handling it this important factor in economical gas manufacturing is assured. The works are built entirely of brick, concrete and steel, and the buildings are approximately 175 feet in length by 40 to 80 feet in width. The chimney is also of brick and is approximately 150 feet high. The masonary and general building work was done by the Flynt Building and Construction Company of Palmer, who were sub-contractors for the Light, Heat and Power Corporation, J. J. Galvin being the superintendent of construction.

The capacity of the plant is 650,000 cubic feet of gas per day, 200,000 of which is already installed, and no expense has been spared in its proper equipment in this direction. In the pump and compressor rooms steam turbines are employed to drive the blowers, and modern automatic governing gas compressors pump the gas at exactly the right pressure to reach the various communities where the mains of the company extend. The holder, also constructed upon the latest models, has a capacity of over 100,000 cubic feet.

The new plant was erected under the personal supervision of J. H. Waterman, general superintendent of the Light, Heat and Power Corporation, with the assistance of Roscoe Y. Conklin, engineer of its gas department.

C. M. Durell, who has heretofore been located in Spencer, will continue in general charge of the Worcester County Gas Co., and the work of cultivating the new field opened up by the company is entrusted to him and his assistants. It is intended to institute a thorough canvass of the district and to demonstrate by practical methods the possibilities of gas for lighting, heating and cooking. A complete line of up-to-date gas appliances will be carried in the Worcester County Gas Company's office at Palmer, and every means will be employed by President Clarke to insure success in the new undertaking although the initial expenditures are large, for he is confident that ultimately the enterprise will prove a great benefit both to the public and to his company.

Thorndike Boy's Sudden Death.

Autopsy Showed Cause to Have Been Septic Meningitis.

Edward Bovat, 15, son of William Bovat of Thorndike, died suddenly at the home of his father Sunday evening. The boy was not feeling well for several days and on Friday complained of having an earache. Saturday he was taken with severe pains in the head and the following day Dr. Dumphy was called. He found the boy in a semi-conscious condition, in which state he remained until his death at 9 o'clock that night.

An autopsy was performed Monday afternoon. Dr. J. P. Schneider, medical examiner, conducted the autopsy, assisted by several other physicians. Death was found to have been caused by septic meningitis.

The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon from St. Anne's church, Three Rivers. Burial was in St. Anne's cemetery. Much sympathy is expressed for the family who have had much trouble within the past year. The boy's mother died a little over a year ago leaving a family of several small children.

LIVED TO BE NEARLY 93.

Death in Ware of Former Three Rivers Woman.

RESIDENT THERE OVER FIFTY YEARS.

Mrs. Harriet Sophia Powell Dies From Effects of Fall at Home of Her Daughter.

Mrs. Harriet Sophia Powell, a former well known and highly respected resident of Three Rivers, died Monday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alice E. Newcomb, in Ware, from the effects of a fall received two weeks ago, when she sustained a broken hip.

Mrs Powell was in her 93d year and retained her faculties to a remarkable degree. Until recently she could sew and read without the aid of glasses and took a keen interest in current affairs.

Mrs Powell was born in Ludlow March 2, 1818. She was married July 4, 1842, to Ogilvie N. Powell, eldest son of Rev. and Mrs. Prosper Powell of Three Rivers. He died several years ago and since his death Mrs. Powell made her home in Three Rivers, until two years ago, when she went to Ware.

She was the mother of four children, three sons and one daughter, the daughter, Mrs. Alice E. Newcomb, with whom Mrs. Powell made her home, being the only one of her children living.

Mrs. Powell felt a just and pardonable pride in her descendants, all having had an honorable career. Mrs Powell's daughter married Sergt. John H. Newcomb of the 2d Regt. Mass. Vols. He died in December, 1883. Mrs. Powell had six grandchildren and 12 great grandchildren. The grandchildren are: Rep. William H. Newcomb of Ware; Rev. Edward H. Newcomb, pastor of the Congregational church in Framingham; former Rep. Arthur E. Newcomb, who represented this district in 1899, but is now a resident of Springfield, and agent for the State Board of Charity; Mrs. Daniel Collins of Ware; Elmer H. Powell of Three Rivers and Frederick W. Powell of Philadelphia, Pa.

Mrs. Powell was of Puritan ancestry. Her father was Alpheus Rice, a descendant of Edmond Rice, who settled in the town of Sudbury in 1639. Her two grandfathers, Jeduthan Rice and Amos Call, served in the Revolutionary War, as did her great-grandfather, Thomas Temple. Her four great-grandfathers served in the Colonial Wars. Mrs. Powell was until recently a regular attendant of the First Baptist church of Three Rivers.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at the home of her daughter in Ware, Rev. Edward H. Newcomb of Framingham officiating. The body was taken to Three Rivers for burial in the old cemetery.

Plans For Palmer Fair.

Directors Meet and Make Important Changes in Premium List.

The directors of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society met Tuesday at the Converse House and revised the premium list for the annual fair next October. It was decided to fall into line with the majority of the societies throughout the state and do away with the entrance fees heretofore required in several classes—drawing matches, herds of milch cows and neat stock, horses for exhibition, and poultry—and there will be no charge for entering in these classes next fall. In view of the large and growing interest in the drawing matches for oxen, it was voted to raise the premiums in the open to all class, and they will be $25, $15, $10 and $5. It is expected that this, with the elimination of the entrance fee, will attract a large number of yoke of heavy cattle, as there are no restrictions whatever in this class. Some new classes will be provided for competition by the young people, full announcement of which will be made later. There will also be a class for amateur photographers, with suitable prizes. The following executive committee, to have charge of the management of the fair from now on, was chosen: O. E. Bradway, L. E. Chandler, R. E. Cummings, W. M. Tucker, H. G. Loomis, F. J. Hamilton, G. C. Flynt, F. G. Rogers, F. A. Moore.

North Wilbraham Man Slashes Thumb.

Nelson Bradway of North Wilbraham met with a painful accident Saturday. While sharpening a large knife preparatory to cutting some meat for one of his customers, his knife slipped and cut the cords on his left thumb. He was taken to the office of Dr. A. L. Damon and later went to a hospital in Springfield to have the cords spliced. He returned Sunday to the home of D. L. Mowry, where he boards.

HAMPDEN GOLDEN WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Newell Celebrate Marriage.

GATHERING HELD AT HOME TUESDAY.

Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo B. Newell of Hampden celebrated the 50th anniversary of their marriage at their home Tuesday, when they informally entertained a large number of their friends.

Mr. Newell was born in South Wilbraham, now called Hampden, and for nearly 40 years has carried on the farm where his life began. He fitted for college at North Wilbraham academy, and entered Amherst, intending to spend his life as a teacher. Such work he carried on most acceptably in winter terms in district schools. His health failing in consequence of overwork, he gave up college life, but for years carried on a private school of high rank in his home town, and later taught in Southampton and in Lockport, N. Y. After his regular school work ended, he frequently taught special pupils. As a member of the school committee he has retained his interest in educational matters, and the public library has found him warmly interested in its welfare.

The wedding of Mr. Newell to Elvira Keep of Monson took place at the bride's home on East Hill in that town January 31, 1861. Mrs. Newell, who was educated at Monson Academy, taught school before her marriage, and after that event assisted her husband for a time in his school. Mr. and Mrs. Newell are members of the Congregational church, where he is a deacon and also superintendent of the Sunday school.

Six children were born to the pair, and all but the youngest survive. They are: Irving A., employed by the American Express Company, who lives in Boston; Herbert D., a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who has charge of the United States Umatilla river irrigation project, and lives in Hermiston, Or.; John M. of Longmeadow, who has business interests in Springfield; Annie E., a teacher by profession, but now somewhat broken in health and not actively engaged, and Cora P., Mrs. Frederic Haigh of Ridgewood, N. J. There are two grandsons, children of Mrs. Haigh. Both Mr. and Mrs. Newell take a keen interest in life's activities, and while he is 75, and she but two years younger, both are young in feeling, if not in years.

The White Birch Scare.

No Need to be Alarmed for the Future of These Trees.

Editor Palmer Journal:

As I read an item in your paper last fall about the possible destruction of our white birches in Palmer, and having read similar pieces elsewhere, I became interested in the subject and determined to find out the truth about it. I have looked it up quite thoroughly since coming back to college last fall, and have come to the following conclusions:

There is no need of worrying at all about the future destruction of our white birches. In the first place, the insect attacks the birches so late in the season that they have made their growth. Of course, if the insect was to attack the birches for a number of seasons in succession they would tend to weaken the trees. In years to come the only thing which will exist in the birches to tell of the ravages of the insects for the past two years will be a slightly smaller growth as shown by the smaller annual rings.

In the second place, we do not need to worry about the future of our white birches because the insect is the birch-leaf skeletonizer, and is a native of this country. It has many foes, enemies and parasites, which I expect will get the best of them either this year or next. The insect has been in this country for centuries and has had its ups and downs. For some reason (possibly the dry season) the insect has increased faster than its foes for the past two years. I think that last year they were at their worst, and that they will start to weaken this year. We may expect another such onslaught in years to come, because the insect goes in regular cycles. The insect receives its name from the nature of its work, for it literally leaves nothing but the skeleton of the leaf after it is through with it.

There is another insect which we should fear more than we do in Palmer, and that is the elm-leaf beetle. I sincerely hope that more may be done this year to save the fine elms that we have. They should, if possible, be sprayed a little earlier than they were last year.

POSSIBLE NEW INDUSTRY.

Proposition to Establish Canning Factory Here.

EXPERIENCED MAN VIEWING FIELD.

There is a possibility that Palmer may have a new industry in the near future if the suggestion of W. B. Hathaway meets with favor among the farmers of this section.

Mr. Hathaway believes that Palmer is ideally located for the establishment of such an industry, and this opinion is also backed by the faculty of the Amherst Agricultural College, whom he has consulted. They believe that there is abundant soil in and near Palmer—including Monson and Brimfield—for the growing of the crops necessary for a cannery—beets, beans, peas, corn, etc. The cannery would enable farmers to market their crops in the easiest manner, and the industry would, if established, demand much larger crops of these vegetables than the average farmer can at present produce with profit, for he cannot find a market for large quantities.

The shipping facilities of Palmer are hardly excelled; there is steam railroad transportation to all points of the compass, with trolley facilities east and west; the latter would also prove of value in bringing in the crops of producers living at a distance. Mr Hathaway has had a considerable experience in canning pineapples in the Hawaiian Islands, putting the fruit up in glass, which finds a ready market where the tinned product goes slow. He would put the product of the local cannery up in the same manner, and feels sure that it would find a ready market.

Mr Hathaway has in mind a site for the plant, where power can be secured at a minimum of expense, and shipping facilities very easily provided for. He is conducting the Hawley Keith farm east of Palmer, which he purchased some time ago, and would like to hear from or talk with any person interested in any way in the proposed project.

Big Lumbering Operations.

The sight of one and a half million feet of sawed lumber, five and a half thousand cords of cut wood and one thousand cords of sawdust is unusual in this section, but Messrs. Caldwell & Cowles of Amherst have just finished cutting and sawing this amount in Ludlow.

The tract was purchased about a year and a half ago, and contained about 550 acres—413 from Stillman Lawton, 50 from G. D. Atchinson, 60 from Matthew Galligan, and the remainder from various other parties. The tract purchased from Mr. Lawton, known as the "Paulk farm," was formerly owned by Mrs. Lawton's father, and a generation ago was one of the best grain farms in this section, with an occasional fine tree growing in the fields. Seeds from these trees were scattered promiscuously and soon land, which was not kept under cultivation, was covered with fine seedlings, and before the owner realized a large part of the 400 acres was growing up to wood and lumber. Mr. Paulk moved away and most of the farm was given up to the ever increasing pines.

A year ago Messrs. Cowles & Caldwell contracted to furnish all the fine lumber to the West Box Company of Springfield. Contractor and Builder R. A. Butter of Orange was engaged to saw the lumber and commenced work Jan. 18, 1910. His contract called for one-tenth square-edged stuff, but nearly one-fifth has been squared. The trees are all sawed close to the ground and cut into such lengths as will make the most lumber, except for some special orders. The mill has been moved seven or eight times so as to be near the cutting gang. Logs are sawed through and through down to four inches in diameter, from one and one-eighth to two and one-half inches in thickness.

The logs are drawn to the mill with two horses attached to an old-fashioned straight-runnered sled which will run on bare ground nearly as well as on snow. It cannot be smashed or tipped over, and when the wooden shoes are worn out they are replaced right in the woods with new ones sawed from birch or maple, the whole performance not occupying over one-half hour. The sawed lumber is drawn out to some place where it can be conveniently reached from the road and stacked up, each kind and thickness by itself, and left to season before it is drawn to the factory. A large part of the slabs, which are not very thick, are burned in the boiler to generate the steam with which to run the engine.

The sawdust is blown from the saw through a wooden pipe and some of the piles are as high as a barn. The greater part of it has already been sold to the ice men to cover their stored ice.

PALMER NEWS.

Men Serve Turkey Supper.

Women Barred From All Participation, and a Fine Menu Provided.

The menu of the Congregational church demonstrated Wednesday evening that "mere man" can successfully cook and serve a supper without feminine suggestion or assistance in any way. And not an ordinary every-day meal, but a hot turkey supper with all the fixin's. The menu was;

Turkey with Dressing. Cranberry Sauce.
Mashed Potato. Turnips. Squash.
Rolls. Celery. Pickles.
Coffee. Neapolitan Ice Cream. Cake.

There was an unusually large number in attendance, presumably to see how near a failure the men could come. They were doomed to disappointment however, for everything was nicely cooked and well served. The meat and vegetables were all hot and served on hot dishes, and served all at once so that there was no waiting. And everyone had all they wished. The men had announced that they would have "no woman on the job," and adhered literally to this declaration, doing the entire work of cooking and serving themselves. The affair was in charge of C. A. LeGro, who managed the dining room with a corps of young men as waiters. The kitchen force consisted of C. L. Waid, R E Cummings, F. J. Hamilton, L E Chandler, C A. Royce and E. E Hobson. The Ladies' Society of the church, which delegates this function to the men once a year, will net a considerable sum from the evening's proceeds.

Electric Light Wires Down.

Falling Tree Carries Away Lines During Heavy Wind Storm.

The Central Massachusetts Electric Company played in hard luck during the heavy wind of Monday. About 4 50 in the afternoon a large tree near the Fay bridge on the Monson road was blown across its wires, carrying them all to the ground and not only cutting off all electric lights but stalling the electric cars as well. The wires for the latter's power were connected again at 6 10, as were also those for the commercial system of lighting. The street lights were not repaired until the next day, as the work could not be done with the current on the other wires, and to have shut the current off long enough to do the work would have left the town without any lights or car service until about 8 or 9 in the evening. The wires were repaired Tuesday afternoon and the lights tested and worked all right, but when they were turned on that night a ground was found which could not be located, and Main street, Thorndike and Pine streets were without lights that night. The trouble was located on Main street Wednesday and repaired in a few moments. A part of the fire alarm was carried off in the Monday night wreck, and a fireman was stationed in the engine house all night to guard against possible danger.

Business Club Lectures.

Series of Talks to Members by Interesting Speakers Planned.

The house committee of the Palmer Business and Social Club has arranged a program of talks or addresses which it believes will be of interest to members of the organization. It is planned to have two a month through February, March and April, and the first will be the 14th of February, when Henry Hobbs, formerly of Thorndike and a famous football player on the Yale team, will speak on "The business side of college athletics." The meeting will be held in the club rooms, and each member will be privileged to invite one guest. The second lecture will be Feb 28, when it is expected that Dr. Field, chairman of the state fish and game commission, will give an illustrated talk on the fish and game question in Massachusetts. This will be held in the Elite motion picture palace, and admission will be by ticket only; each club member will be entitled to two extra tickets for this lecture. After the talk the party will adjourn to the rooms of the club. It is planned to serve a lunch at all of these meetings and an endeavor will be made to secure other speakers as interesting as the first two are sure to be.

Rev. Thomas Donoghue Hurt.

Painfully But Not Seriously Injured in Collis on at Funeral.

Rev. Thomas S. Donoghue, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic church of Thorndike, was injured in a collision between the taxicab in which he was riding and an auto furniture truck at Holyoke yesterday about one o'clock in the afternoon. Fr. Donoghue was in attendance at the funeral of Rt Mgr E S. Fitzgerald, and with three other priests was in a taxi in the funeral cortege. As it approached a narrow place in the road it was struck by a heavy auto truck belonging to Meekins, Packard & Wheat of Springfield; the taxi was considerably wrecked and the inmates more or less hurt. Fr. Donoghue was as slightly injured as any of the four, his hurts being confined to cuts and a general shaking up. He is expected home this evening or tomorrow. None of the party were seriously injured, though two were so badly shaken up and cut by flying glass that they will probably remain a week at the hospital, to which all were taken.

High School Play a Success.

Nearly every seat in the opera house was filled last Friday evening, when the senior class of the high school presented "The elopement of Ellen." The parts were—all of them—unusually well taken, and the piece was presented minus much of the stiffness expected in amateur performances. To pick out any one character as worthy of especial mention would be unfair to the other members of the cast. Much credit for the smoothness of the production is due Miss Linton, the English teacher in the school, who trained the players. The class cleared a generous sum, which will be added for the Washington trip.

How to Tell if Your Hair Is Diseased.

Even if you have a luxuriant head of hair you may want to know whether it is in a healthy condition or not. 98 per cent of the people need a hair tonic.

Pull a hair out of your head; if the bulb at the end of the root is white and shrunken, it proves that the hair is diseased, and requires prompt treatment if its loss would be avoided. If the bulb is pink and full, the hair is healthy.

We want every one whose hair requires treatment to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. We promise that it shall not cost anything if it does not give satisfactory results. It is designed to overcome dandruff, relieve scalp irritation, to stimulate the hair roots, tighten the hair already in the head, grow hair and cure baldness.

It is because of what Rexall "93" Hair Tonic has done and our sincere faith in its goodness that we want you to try it at our risk. Two sizes, 50c and $1 00. Sold only at our store—The Rexall Store. Lynde & Gould, Palmer.

Reverend Joseph Vaill
Of Hadlyme, Conn.

By O. P. Allen. | And his descendants of three generations of ministers.

By the courtesy of a friend resident in Hadlyme, Ct., I have recently had the loan of a small volume containing the biography of Rev. Joseph Vaill, an old-time pastor of the Congregational church in that town, the worthy father of our honored Dr. Joseph Vaill of Palmer. The volume was written by Rev. Isaac Parsons and published in 1839.

Presuming upon the interest which many readers of the Journal have always entertained for our Dr. Vaill, I have gleaned some facts from the above-noted volume, to which have been added data from other sources, recently obtained.

Rev. Joseph Vaill Sr. was born in Litchfield, Ct, July 14, 1751. His father was Daniel Vaill, a native of Southold, R. I. His mother was Jernsha, daughter of William Peck. Both parents were members of the Congregational church of Litchfield, Ct. Young Vaill received instruction in the common schools and at home until he attained his majority, when he began to desire a college education to fit him for the ministry. A plan opened about this time which seemed to pave the way for the promotion of his cherished object. An acquaintance had settled in the vicinity of Dartmouth College in 1772, who had the charge of a saw and grist mill, the property of the college, who proposed a plan whereby several young men might have work in the mill for a portion of the time to defray college expenses. In September, 1772, young Vaill accepted this offer and set out on foot for the college, 180 miles distant. He reached his destination on October 5, located about one mile from the college and began work in the mills at once as a preliminary introduction to college life, upon which he was soon enabled to enter. However, his work at the mills became so irksome that it impaired his health, when he was given the privilege of instructing a class of Canadian boys in one of the college rooms which served to defray his expenses. He dated his conversion after entering college and joined the college church. After passing through many hardships and privations he took the degree in 1778.

The experiences of young Vaill are in striking contrast to college life of to-day, but as narrated in his life, a kind Providence seemed to open the way for his progress in the time of his greatest need. Having finished his college education, he entered upon the study of theology with Rev. Mr Storrs of Northbury, Ct, in October, 1778, and was licensed to preach May 23 1779. He accepted a call and was ordained over the Congregational church of Hadlyme, Ct., Feb. 9, 1780.

The strenuous experience attending his efforts to obtain an education proved a valuable training school, fitting him to adopt himself to circumstances in after life, enabling him to fully sympathize with others who were struggling against adverse conditions.

He entered upon the duties of his parish with a deep sense of his responsibility, and always conducted his labors with honest fidelity. The times were unsettled which gave birth to a nation, but amid the strife and turmoil he led his people successfully onward and upward. Nor did he neglect the younger portion of his flock, but held special services for their instruction and edification, thus evincing his wisdom and foresight for their spiritual good which bore abundant vintage.

He was noted for his punctuality, never failing to be present at the moment appointed. As a preacher he was plain and simple in his style, and in his manner solemn and ardent. The long period of his ministry called him to be well known in his section of the state, and in the nearing close of his successful ministry he was listened to with delight by the good people, who looked upon him as a venerable and faithful minister of Christ.

His salary was but £70 ($350) per year, yet by strict economy he lived upon the small stipend and discharged his obligations. It was his practice to read his sermons on Saturday night to his wife and children, in order to gain his wife's opinion regarding them and give his children an opportunity to hear the truth contained in them.

He opened a preparatory school for young men, and this enabled him to give his sons the benefit of a college education and qualify his daughters to become teachers. Near the close of his long ministry he entered fully into the spirit of the temperance reformation, and by his example and influence led every member of his church to enroll themselves members of the temperance society.

Owing to the infirmities of age Mr. Vaill, in 1832 arranged with his church to relieve him of the main responsibility of the parish charge by procuring a colleague, which was done, and in 1836 he retired entirely from the ministry, and from Hadlyme, where he had labored so long and faithfully, and went to spend his last days in well-earned retirement with his daughter, Mrs. Evarts, in Killingworth, Ct, but even there he often preached as a supply with much efficiency.

He entered into rest in Killingworth Nov 21, 1838, in the 88th year of his age and the 59th year of his ministry. His funeral sermon was preached by Rev. Isaac Parsons of East Hadlyme.

Rev. Joseph Vaill married Oct. 2, 1780, Sarah, daughter of Rev. Joseph Fowler of East Hadlyme, who was eminently fitted by education and temperament to aid her husband in the government of her household and in promoting the cause of religion among the people. She died in July, 1832. They were blessed with eight children, four of whom died in infancy. Two sons and two daughters grew to honored maturity, evincing in their valuable lives the care with which they had been reared. Rev. William F. Vaill, the eldest son, entered the ministry and preached acceptably for a time in North Guilford, Ct, from which charge he was dismissed, with regret of his people, April 12, 1820, to become a missionary to the Asage Indians. Sarah, the eldest daughter, married Joel Norcross of Monson. Amanda, the youngest daughter, married David Evarts of Killingworth, Ct.

Rev. Joseph Vaill, D D., the second son, was born in Hadlyme July 28, 1790. He prepared for college under the tuition of his father, and graduated from Yale in the class of 1811, which included many men who later proved eminent in their profession. After graduation he taught school in Litchfield and Salisbury, Ct., and then studied theology with his father with the view of entering the ministry. Having preached several times before the Congregational church in Brimfield, that body with the town gave him a call to become their pastor with a salary of $550 per year, which offer he accepted and was ordained and installed Feb. 2, 1814, his father preaching the sermon, while his only brother, Rev. W. F. Vaill, was a member of the council. His pastorate of 20 years in Brimfield was crowned with marked success. His genial manners and consistent piety won the affection of his people. His labors were followed by several seasons of revivals, which resulted in an addition of 176 members to the church in five years.

During the latter part of his pastorate some of the prominent members of the church embraced the so-called doctrine of Perfectionism, which became such a disturbing factor that Mr. Vaill deemed it best to sever his connection with the Brimfield church, and he was dismissed at his own request September 16, 1834, in order to accept a call to the Second Congregational church in Portland, Me., where he remained with acceptance till 1837, when at his request he was dismissed to accept a second call to the Brimfield church, where he was installed November 1, 1837, remaining there until October 19, 1841, when he resigned to act as the financial agent for Amherst College, which was in great need of aid in order to carry on its work. He labored in this important mission for four years and succeeded in collecting nearly $100,000 for the institution, which placed it upon a foundation which still firmly remains. It was a large sum for those days, and speaks well for the master mind which won such signal success. He was a trustee of the college from 1821 till his death, and was honored with the degree of D. D. in 1851.

After discharging his labors for the college he accepted a call to the church in Somers, Ct, where he was installed August 6, 1845, and was dismissed December 4, 1854, to accept a call to the Second Congregational church in Palmer, where he was installed December 6 1854. Here, after a successful pastorate of thirteen years, and having attained to the age of 78, he was dismissed at his own request February 12, 1868. In the autumn of the same year he was elected a representative from the Palmer district to the Massachusetts Legislature as a fitting testimonial of the high regard with which he was held by his fellow townsmen. In the Legislature he was made chairman of the committee on parishes and religious societies, and a member of the committee on the liquor law. Undue exposure in connection with the duties of his office resulted in typhoid pneumonia, and he died at his home in Palmer, February 22, 1869. His funeral was attended by delegations from the Legislature and Amherst College, by many clergymen and a large concourse of his former parishioners. The sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Stearns, president of Amherst College. He was buried in Brimfield.

While Dr. Vaill was a type of the old school of New England ministers in some respects, yet he was progressive and kept pace with the spirit of the times, as for instance, when he came to Palmer he abandoned the mode of preaching sermons one hour and one-half long, in a church without warmth in winter, and limited his sermons to half an hour in a house of comfort, saying: "If my sermons are shorter I mean to make them better," and he continued to write new sermons to the last. Near the close of his ministry he stated he had preached 7000 times and written 2000 sermons besides giving many lectures and addresses, numbers of which were published.

A stranger meeting Dr. Vaill on the street would never mistake him for any other than a minister, yet if he had occasion to converse with him he would soon be at ease in the presence of one of the most genial of men, who could change an enemy into a friend at short notice. The politic exercise of this natural spirit of urbanity, coupled with undoubted sincerity, was doubtless the key to his successful pastorate. Besides giving full attention to his pastoral duties, Dr. Vaill for 30 years gave much time as a member of the school committee in the town where he ministered, and was a trustee of several educational institutions.

Dr. Vaill married first, December 7, 1813, Anne Kirtland of Hadlyme, Ct. She died in 1829. He married second, January 6, 1830, Mrs. Nancy (Pope) Howe of Ware, who died February 3, 1871. The children of the first marriage were as follows, born in Brimfield:

I. William Kirtland, born April 29, 1815 (See below).

II. Timothy Dwight, born May 12, 1817; married Belle Breck; had children and resided in Bound Brook, N. Y. Was connected with a mercantile house in New York city.

IV. Anne Elizabeth, born May 22, 1820; married Samuel Selby. Removed to California.

VI. Rev. Henry Martyn, born Feb 6, 1824; married (1) June 4, 1861, Martha C. Webb of Waldoboro, Me.; married (2) May 23, 1872, Elizabeth W. Webster of Cape Elizabeth, Me. Spent a portion of the year 1844, with class of '48 at Amherst College, then devoted some time to teaching in Newburyport, Mass, and later studied theology with his father. Had these pastorates with Congregational churches: Staffordville, Ct., 1860 to 1865; Cape Elizabeth, Me., 1865—1871; Hadlyme, Ct., 1871—1875; which last pastorate he resigned because of ill health. Later he located in Somers, where improved health permitted him to preach as a supply for a time. In 1880 he became for the second time the pastor at Staffordville, which he resigned to accept a call at Marlboro, Ct, in 1886, remaining there till 1889, and then retired from active ministerial work, preaching only occasionally as a supply. Since 1892, Mr. Vaill and his wife have made their home in Staffordville, he being the surviving member of three generations of ministers in the Vaill family.

VII. Edward Warren, born April 6, 1826; married (1) Isabelle Partridge; married (2) Etta ——. For many years he was a manufacturer of folding chairs in Worcester. When last heard from he was living with his daughter Anne in the state of New York.

The above Rev. Kirtland Vaill, born April 29, 1815, married January 17, 1842, Julia Turner of Killingworth, Ct. He died at Packardville, (Pelham), Mass., June 18, 1889; she died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. F. A. Cadwell, in Amherst, Mass., April 7, 1896. He was a student at Amherst College, 1832-1833, class of '36; studied theology with his father. He was principal of the secondary school at Chicopee, 1842-1846; Pickering grammar school, 1849-1854; chaplain Monson State Almshouse, 1864 to 1866; pastor Congregational church, Shutesbury, Mass., 1866 to 1871; Union Congregational church, Packardville, (Pelham), Mass, June 28, 1871 to 1887. He resigned in August, 1879, but the church voted not to accept, and he withdrew his resignation and continued as above to the acceptance of his parish. He resided on his own farm at Packardville, where in May, 1889, when his house and barn were destroyed by fire, he was burned so severely in escaping from the house, that he died in a few weeks after much suffering. The children of W. K and J Vaill were: (1) Timothy and (2) Sarah Delia, who died in infancy; (3) Sarah Wooster, unmarried, resides in Amherst; (4) Adaline Turner, married Frank A. Cadwell, resides in Amherst; (5) William Henry, who married and died in Worcester several years ago.

Monson News.

Monson Academy 21, Holyoke 16.

The Academy basketball team played a close game with Holyoke high in Holmes gymnasium Saturday afternoon and succeeded in winning by the score of 21 to 16 The game put up by the local team was the slowest that they have played this season. This together with hard luck at shooting made the game nearly even. Coach French used eight men on the Monson team, but it was an off day for all of them and not until the game was ended was Monson sure of a victory. Smith of the local team played all over the floor and gave his man a merry chase. Cronin starred for the visitors, and if Eaton, the Holyoke right forward, had not used football tactics so often his playing might have been considered more brilliant. Nine fouls were called on him, five of these resulting in points for the home team, which was just enough to defeat Holyoke. In the preliminary the freshmen defeated the sophomorea 13 to 4. The line-up:

Monson.	Holyoke.
Kidd, Entwistle, lf,	rf, Eaton
Smith, rf,	lf, Flanagan (captain)
Weeks, Squier, c,	c, Holbrook
Hopper, Dewing, lb,	rf, Cronin
Dunsford (captain), rfb,	lf, Sullivan

Score, Monson Academy 21, Holyoke High 16; baskets from floor, Weeks 2, Dunsford 2, Smith 2, Entwistle, Squier, Sullivan 2, Eaton, Flanagan, Cronin; baskets on free tries, Dunsford 5, Cronin 6; free tries missed, Dunsford 4, Kidd 3, Cronin 4. Referee, Donnelly, Springfield Training School; timers, Taylor and Dowd. Time, 20-minute halves.

Class Initiation and Installation.

The annual class initiation and installation of officers of Wiseman court, Massachusetts Catholic order of Foresters, was held in Memorial Hall Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Ahont 300 members from the McDermott and St. Valerian courts of Springfield were present. Thirty-six new members were initiated, the work being done by the pony degree team of the McDermott court. The following officers were installed by the degree team of the St. Valerian court; Chief ranger, Jamea Burdick; vice chief ranger, Miss Julia Moran; recording secretary, Miss Mary O'Brien; financial secretary, Miss Mary Murphy; S. C., Mrs. Bridie Burke; J. C., Miss Grace Sullivan; treasnrer, Mrs. May Burdick; inside guard, Mrs. Bridget McCarthy; trustees, Mra. Sullivan, Mrs. Mary McDonald and Miss Mary O'Connor; delegate to the Worcester convention, Miss J. V. Cantwell. Miss J. V. Cantwell, the past chief ranger, was presented with a gold rosary and an elegant bonquet of rosea by the members of the local court, the presentation speech being made by James Burdick. The music for the affair waa furnished by the Musical Club of the McDermott court of Springfield.

Academy and Town Team May Play.

There is much discussion among the Monson basketball followers regarding the possibility of arranging a game between the Academy team and the town team. Four of the town team players are alumni of the Academy—Giffin and Moran of the '07 and '08 team, Fanlkner of the '07 and '08 team, and Osborne of the '08 and '09 team; the fifth man is Durkin, the star center. The Academy officials and players do not hesitate to express their opinion that it would be an easy victory for the Academy team. The town team are not expressing their opinion, but are anxious to arrange a game with the Academites. It wonld undoubtedly be a good game and a record-breaking crowd wonld surely fill Memorial Hall, which is the only place to play the game, as the gymnasium could accommodate bnt a small percentage of the crowd that the town team's gamea attracts. The next game in Memorial Hall will be played Thnraday evening, Feb. 16, with the faat St. Jeromes of Holyoke.

Woman's Danger Periods Made Safe

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Here is proof:

Natick, Mass.,—"I cannot express what I went through during the Change of Life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still. My limbs were cold. I had creepy sensations and could not sleep nights. I was finally told by two physicians that I had a tumor.

"I read one day of the wonderful cures made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it has worked a miracle for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold for women during this period of life. If it will help others you may publish this letter."—Mrs. Nathan B. Greaton, 51 No. Main St., Natick, Mass.

ANOTHER SIMILAR CASE.

Cornwallville, N. Y.—"I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for some time for Change of Life, nervousness, and a fibroid growth.

"Two doctors advised me to go to the hospital, but one day while I was away visiting, I met a woman who told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and I know it helped me wonderfully. I am very thankful that I was told to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Wm. Boughton, Cornwallville, N. Y., Greene Co.

The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have thousands of such letters as those above—they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger—it has stood the test for years.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

The testimonials which are constantly being published in the Pinkham advertisements are guaranteed to be absolutely genuine, honest, and given without reward in any way whatever.

BROWN-TAIL MOTH NESTS.

Several Have Been Found on Park Street Trees.

MAY HAVE LOTS OF THEM THIS YEAR

But Vigorous Fight Will Be Made Against Them. Town Well Fixed For the Work.

There seemed to be a prospect the first of the week that the town of Palmer would have a gypsy moth fight on its hands this spring, but luckily it proved nothing more serious than a scare, so far as the gypsy moth is concerned. There is likely to be trouble with the brown-tail moth however, in addition to the elm-tree beetle.

An agent of the state commission for the extermination of gypsy moths—Henry D Ramsey—was in town Monday to confer with Tree Warden Keith concerning shade trees, and discovered some moth nests on a tree near Mr. Keith's house on Park street. It was reported at first that they were nests of the gypsy moth, but this was erroneous, as they were of the brown-tail moth instead No traces of the gypsy moth have been found in Palmer, although a search was made not long ago

The town is well equipped for a fight against moths and other similar pests, as a powerful spraying apparatus was purchased last year, although it was received rather late in the season However, the apparatus is now on hand and can be put into commission at any time in a few hours It is likely that every effort will be made to prevent the moths from obtaining a foothold in this town.

Mr. Ramsey states that he expects serious ravages from the moths hereabouts. They have been found in the Brookfields, the Warrens, Brimfield and Ware, and it is rather surprising that more of them have not been found here.

While the work of the brown-tail moth is not so destructive as that of the gypsy, it is more of a nuisance in some ways than the other. It sheds a fine "fuzz" from its body which poisons the skin to a painful extent It is not necessary to come in contact with the moth to be poisoned, as the "fuzz" is carried by the wind long distances, and persons frequently find themselves suffering from what seems like poison ivy poison when they have not been near the latter nor knowingly in contact with the moths

Special Town Meeting.

Overseers of Poor and Selectmen Both Get Additional Funds.

The special town meeting which was held last Saturday was attended by possibly 50 voters. D. L. Bodfish was chosen moderator.

The overseers of poor were given $1600 additional, with which to meet the bills of the year. They explained that owing to new laws in effect this year unexpected expenses had been added to their department. The selectmen were given $200 additional for their contingent fund. They stated that, so far as they knew, they could squeeze through the year with the balance on hand provided no unexpected bills were presented, but that it was by no means certain. They wished enough to be on the safe side and it was granted. The sum of $50 was also appropriated—to be paid from the selectmen's contingent fund—for a survey of the proposed carpet mill sewer. The selectmen were authorized to borrow the necessary funds.

In the matter of the carpet mill sewer, a committee consisting of C A LeGro, H M. Howe and H. W. Holbrook was appointed to secure a survey of the locality and plans for a sewer from the mill to a suitable outlet. A committee consisting of D. L. Bodfish, R C. Newell, E G Childs, C. A. Tabor and H W. Holbrook was appointed to formulate a scheme of permanent road building between the villages of the town and report at the annual town meeting. The plan is to have the committee decide where to build and what kind of road to construct; where a beginning shall be made and the course to be followed year after year until the whole scheme is completed. This is calculated to do away with promiscuous work—the building of a strip here one year and there another—and give the town adequate return for the money expended and ultimately good roads connecting all the villages.

Biggest Snow of the Season.

And There's Good Sleighing Now. Street Railway's Good Showing.

If snow counts for anything in determining the season, the last three days have been more like winter than anything we have had since the ground froze up last fall. There was a "spell of weather" before the snow came which gave a variety of samples. Last Saturday it rained hard all day, then froze during the night. Sunday was pleasant but cold. Monday morning the mercury stood at zero and clung close to above until about 4 in the afternoon, when it rose four or five degrees and the snow began to fall. The depth was about six inches, and sleighs have been in order for the first time this winter.

The street railway company weathered the storm in great shape. The plows were kept running through the night Monday and Tuesday nearly all of the cars were on time or close to it all day. The Bondsville line slipped a few minutes in the forenoon, and the Springfield line was bothered about getting out of that city; once clear of the State street hill however there was no trouble, or at least none when the cars reached the S and E. track at Ludlow.

VANDALISM AT MONSON.

Oil Portrait Cut From Frame in Academy Dormitory.

ALL BUT COOK ABSENT FROM PLACE.

Tells Story of Two Masked Men Who Attacked Her and Threw Her Down Stairs.

The officials of Monson Academy at Monson and the people of the town were given a severe shock last Friday evening about 10 o'clock when it was announced that an attempt had been made to either destroy or steal the oil portrait of Frank Chapin Cushman which adorns the entrance of Cushman Hall, the Academy dormitory.

The story as given to the police officers and the Academy officials by the cook at the hall, Miss Elizabeth Toomey, who was supposedly responsible for the failure of the thieves to do harm to the picture was as follows: She had been to the entertainment at Memorial Hall but felt ill and left early, returning to Cushman Hall about 9:30 o'clock and going to her room on the second floor. She was alone in the building, all the students and teachers attending the entertainment in Memorial Hall. About 9:45 she heard suspicious noises and got up to investigate Just outside her door she met a strange man evidently with false whiskers on; he grabbed her and threw her down the stairs, then pushed her into the reception room. Here she broke away from her assailant and ran out into the main entrance, where she was confronted by another stranger, who also wore a false beard; he had the picture of Frank Cushman in his hands and also carried a knife. The picture had been ripped out of the frame She grappled with the man and a fierce struggle ensued, during which part of her clothing was ripped off, her arm was scratched and part of her hair was slashed off.

The indignation of the Academy officials was naturally aroused, as no motive for the act either by Monson people or picture thieves could be imagined. The picture, although a valuable one to the Cushman family, was not considered valuable enough to outsiders to attract the attention of picture thieves.

Officer Murray began an investigation, and several of the younger people had to answer as to their whereabouts at the time of the occurrence.

Saturday afternoon a Pinkerton detective from Boston arrived and began investigations which he continued until Tuesday evening. The trustees of the Academy are awaiting a report from him, but it is well understood that after hearing Mrs Toomey's stories of the affair he was not long in reaching a conclusion as to who the picture "thief" was After considerable questioning by the detective and after he had explained to her the absurdity of some of her explanations, Mrs. Toomey replied: "You can put me in jail if you want to, but I will never tell what I know." Wednesday she resigned her position and was permitted to return to her home in Millers Falls. If the detective reports that Mrs. Toomey was the only person responsible for removing the picture from the frame, a motive for the cut cannot be imagined unless it was to create a sensation or perhaps with the expectation of getting a reward for "preventing" the removal of the picture from the building.

MARRIED FIFTY YEARS.

Three Rivers Couple Celebrate "Golden Wedding."

MR. AND MRS. DANIEL J. FOGARTY.

Born and Married in Ireland, But Long-time Residents of Town Of Palmer.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J Fogarty of Three Rivers celebrated the 50th anniversary of their marriage at their home on Bourne street yesterday, when they entertained a large number of relatives and friends who called to extend hearty congratulations

Mr Fogarty was born in County Kerry, Ireland, 82 years ago; Mrs Fogarty, whose maiden name was Joanna Sullivan, was also born in County Kerry and is 76 years of age. They were married in Killarney, Ireland, February 9 1861. They came to this country 30 years ago, and with the exception of a few years spent in Belchertown have always resided in Three Rivers. They have had ten children, all of whom are living with the exception of James, who died in Ireland. The others are: Mrs John Kiley of Holyoke, Michael J. of Holyoke, Nellie T. of Amherst, Katherine of Springfield, Mrs Bridget Doherty of Three Rivers, and Anna, Julia, Daniel and John, who live at home.

Mr and Mrs Fogarty were the recipients of numerous gifts They are both in good health, and their numerous friends wish them many more years of health and happiness. Among the guests present yesterday was Patrick Kelley of Forest Lake, who attended the wedding 50 years ago.

A dinner was served, at which the following toasts and poems were prepared and given by Daniel Horgan of Three Rivers:

Then here's to the couple
Who through thick and thin
Strove hard to accomplish their best;
And now whose last years begin
With the comforts of home and of rest.

"To look back this happy wintry morning of 1911 to the other morning of 1861, seems a very long time. But oh, how short! The years have sped away until now, grown old together, you are celebrating the 50th anniversary of the time when united in the holy bonds of matrimony, you stepped forth, thenceforth destined to lead a double life What joys, what sorrows, what vicissitudes might you not relate?

The ravages of time and trouble have left you intact, and in your last days sheltered by the hands of your children. You two have accomplished your duty towards God and man, and when passed to your fathers you will enjoy the heavenly fruits of your earthly work. You have placed your name in one of the highest portions of the annals of those oppressed and exiled from their native land, have come to the Land of Freedom You have brought up your children in the grace of God, and when you leave this earthly sphere that One will greet you with the words 'Well Done!'"

"Cura pidiebus sunt, et qui colner columitur."

Good people all of every sort,
Give ear unto my song;
And if you find it wondrous short,
It won't detain you long.

In Ireland there was a man
Of whom the world may say,
He loved right, had might,
And often managed to pray.

A kind and gentle heart he had,
To comfort friends and foes;
The naked every day he clad,
When he put on his clothes.

And in that town a lass was found,
Though many lassies there be,
Both rich and poor and tall and short,
But she was of high degree.

Around from all the neighboring towns
The merry neighbors came,
Kelleys and O'Hallorans and Fogartys galore,
Together with the Sullivans, and many, many more.

The Fogartys vowed that he looked best,
The Sullivans that she,
But between them both they patched it up,
Over the wedding tea.

New Church For Ware.

Rev. J. T. Sheehan, pastor of Mount Carmel church in Ware for over 30 years, announced at the service Sunday morning that the property, including the parochial school buildings and residence, are free from debt There is also $18,000 to form a nucleus for the building of a new church, which is badly needed, as the present edifice is outgrown and hardly large enough to hold at one time a third of the 3000 or more parishioners It is thought the showing will aid to hasten the day for starting the new church.

Benjamin Johnson celebrated his 60th birthday at his home near the carpet mill Saturday evening, when he entertained a large number of friends. He was presented with a chair, J. Barker making the presentation speech. Mr. Johnson responded in a suitable manner, speaking of his career as a workman. He said he began work when he was six years old. He is a dresser in the carpet mill and has worked at that trade for 46 years He hopes to continue in active work at least 10 years longer. The evening was pleasantly spent with songs, recitations and story telling.

BIG TIMBER TRACT SOLD.

Comprising Several Farms in Wales and Holland.

AN AMHERST MAN IS THE PURCHASER

Work of Getting Out Timber Already Begun. Some of Land Held Many Years.

One of the largest transactions in timberland which has taken place in Hampden county for many years was recently consummated, when Frank A. Cadwell of Amherst bought approximately 500 acres of land situated in the towns of Wales and Holland and Stafford a d Union, Ct., from the estate of Isaiah Hiscock, late of Wales. The timber tracts will not total 500 acres, but are probably much more than half of that Some of the farms embraced in the tract are the Ben Needham place in Wales and Holland; the Merrick Converse place in Wales, near Lake Florence; the Ainsworth place in Wales; the Converse place in Wales and Holland; the Adams place near the reservoir in Holland, and several others.

The work of stripping off the timber has already begun, and it is probable that more than a year will be necessary to complete the task Carleton L. Kimball of Enfield is in charge of the teaming work on the job. He has moved to Wales and rented half of the Steele house on Main street and the large barn back of the Baptist church. He now has four teams at work delivering ties to the electric railway company at O'Neil's corner.

In addition to these ties, Mr Cadwell has contracted to deliver 7000 to the Boston and Albany Railroad Company. The timber on the Needham farm has already been stripped and the sawmill is now at work on the Merrick Converse place.

The heirs of Mr Hiscock are his widow, Mrs. Amy Hiscock, who lives in Wales, and a daughter, Mrs Fred Bowden of Stafford, Ct. The news of the sale of this tract came as a great surprise to many residents in the vicinity of Wales, who had made various attempts to buy parts of the tract from Mr. Hiscock during his lifetime, but he would never consider any offers.

The timber includes mostly chestnut, with some pine and hemlock. There are tracts on some farms which have not been cut over within the memory of any person now living and much of the growth is half a century old.

It was sold to the Congregational Church Building Society of New York, which has held the property for some time without being willing to sell. It was used for church services less than 10 years ago, the last pastor being Rev. Louis Rivard. The building has been utterly neglected for several years, and has been an eyesore to those living in that vicinity. Mr. Clark has no definite idea as to what disposition he will make of the property, but made an offer for it with a desire to control the situation, and the offer was accepted.

Sues For Young Man's Death.

Autoist Claimed to be Responsible For Gordon Miller's Decease.

Suit was entered in the superior court in Springfield this week by Ethel M. Miller of Thorndike, executrix of the estate of her brother, W. Gordon Miller, against George Merriam of Bondsville, for $5000 for the death of her brother, which occurred July 27 last. Mr. Miller was returning home in the evening with a horse and carriage about two weeks before his death, and was in collision with the auto owned and driven by Mr Merriam, being somewhat hurt. Later he was taken ill and was supposed to have typhoid fever. Later developments however seemed to point to other causes as responsible for his death, and it is alleged that the primary cause of the trouble was the injury received in the collision with the auto.

Still Shy Of Funds.

Overseers of Poor Need More Money to Pay All Bills of Year.

When the overseers of the poor began a few weeks ago to talk special town meeting in order to get money enough to pay their bills, they began with an estimate of $500 needed. This was increased later to $1000 and then to $1200, then to $1500 and finally to $1600, which they were given last Saturday. It is understood however that this does not meet the requirements of the board, and that there are bills already on hand for which there are no funds available. There is also a likelihood that the last meeting of the board for the fiscal year, to be held next week, will develop still other indebtedness, as there are always a few "last minute" bills which are presented at that meeting.

The telephone company has been setting some new poles this week to replace some which have become badly weakened by age. Two were on Main street near the bridge over the Boston and Albany tracks, and one of these proved a difficult proposition, in fact, the hardest job the foreman of the gang, with an experience of 20 years, says he ever encountered. Wires ran to the old pole from almost every direction, and were so placed that the pole had to be raised carefully and pushed between the wires, making the raising an almost impossible task. The new poles are 55 feet high, and some of them are also used jointly by the electric light people.

Doings of the Legislature.

Representative Cushing Turned Down—Gypsy Moth Investigation—A Working Council—Legislative Quality—Conservatives in Control—Legislature Not Working Very Hard.

BOSTON, Feb 8, 1911.

Representative Grafton D. Cushing of Boston does not seem to make progress as a candidate for speaker, judging by the vote in the House yesterday upon his reciprocity resolution with Canada. It looked as if he were trying to get his resolution ahead of Gov. Foss's message and he was voted down by 33 yeas to 162 nays on his motion to have the rules suspended requiring the matter to be referred to a committee. It was apparently his purpose to have the question taken at once upon the adoption of the resolutions. If that had been carried and the resolutions adopted, there would have been no occasion for action on the governor's message when that should come along in due course. But it would have been out of order for the House to act upon the resolutions until the Senate had concurred in suspending the rules to admit them During the discussion there was much parliamentary confusion and Mr. Lomasney of Boston made a point of order twice against Speaker Walker, but was overruled. The significance of the matter lies in two directions. It looks as if the House would at least not act hastily, and perhaps its motive was to give a show of fair play to the governor. Again, it shows that Cushing does not carry weight with the House in a crisis like this, and he is a candidate for speaker next session. He took the field last session, or just before it, making an entry which would bring him before the public. The action of the House does not demonstrate that he has yet these new members in hand sufficiently to capture the chair next year, and therefore he must cultivate them still more diligently, if he expects to win.

If there had not been a gypsy moth investigation before now, perhaps the present outbreak against the administration would make more of an impression and appeal more to popular support. But the state has had a most costly experience in listening to graft charges, and perhaps the lesson has been learned. The consequence of the former outcry against the administration was the discontinuance of all work for four years. High officials have repeatedly, in my hearing, charged Gov. Crane with the responsibility of the present scourge of gypsy moths, saying that if he had only, as governor, gone out and looked at the ground, he would never have consented to the discontinuance of the appropriation. But he did not go. The investigating committee made the most violently partisan report against the administration which has been made in the last 30 years on any subject. Officials who had done honest and faithful work were discouraged at the official indorsement of attacks upon their honesty and the state had to bear the result of its own folly. It is the official opinion that if the four years' suspension of work had not occurred, the moth would not only have been suppressed, but exterminated. Now that is impossible, though many millions have been spent vainly trying to make good a blunder. So when a new crop of shouters make charges, there is a discount upon them. It is quite possible that there are weak spots in the administration. But the nature of this attack prevents as much weight from being given to it as if it came from other quarters. But the investigation has the effect of spurring the department and of bracing them up to do still better work. Publicity helps and the inquiry will doubtless do good, but will probably not discredit the administration materially.

It has probably not been mentioned anywhere in print that our executive council is working this year as it has never been known to work before since this so-called useless fifth wheel of the administration coach was established. Omitting Saturdays, when it is understood that they are not to be obliged to work, it is said that there have been only two other week days since they took their oaths of office that they have not been at work, either as whole council, or that the finance committee has not been working, making a study of the state finances. Formerly, sessions have been held weekly, as a rule, with occasional meetings as need required, especially trips to institutions for the purpose of examining them Yet no petition for increase of salary has come from the councillors.

The governor is free and general in his practice of picking up information and points about public men and affairs, so much so that some of the men near him think that he pays too much attention to sources which should not be given weight. But he runs things his own way and it remains to be seen which view is right. The result of legislative action on the power to permit him to investigate state boards and institutions will probably not be reached. The Senate, by the adoption of the amendment of Senator Greenwood of Worcester putting the investigation into the hands of a committee of three, consisting of the governor and two chairmen of the ways and means committees, deprives the governor of initiative and control. The House is expected to stand with Speaker Walker in supporting the governor. Either the Senate must finally yield, or the governor will not get what he wants and then the issue will be, what will happen to the regular appropriations.

This Legislature has not as yet shown its quality in detail, but the indications are that the House, under the leadership of Speaker Walker, and by a majority which is composed of a material proportion of the Republicans and about all the Democrats, will be what is called progressive, while the Senate, whether under the leadership of President Treadway or not, will be what its strong Republican majority enables it to be easily, a conservative body. The House seems to stand in harmony with the verdict of the state at the last election. The Senate seems to stand for the traditional position of the Republican management, which received such a shock last fall. There is no doubt that the conservative element won a decisive victory in the election of Senator Lodge for his fourth term. There is not a particle of question that the governor is made to seem as if he were losing his hold on the people and no longer represented the majority which elected him. Hence the acts of the Senate and House respectively have an important bearing upon the campaign in the fall. Of course the Republicans will make every possible effort to redeem the state. If the conservative Senate defeats the will of the progressive House, then the question will come whether the conservatives represent the real sentiment of the state, or whether the progressives still have the backing of the people and whether a progressive candidate for governor will be the most likely to win. Therefore the situation is of vital importance to Speaker Walker in his candidacy for governor. In a progressive House can Mr. White of Brookline, a candidate against Walker, afford to play the role of a conservative? The situation demands the best political judgment the candidates can summon.

In the meantime, the conservatives have the best fighting ground. They have a majority of the Senate. All they have to do is to stand pat there. Let the House pass all the radical legislation it pleases, if only there are 21 out of the 26 Republican senators who will stand fast to the conservative order, then the risk of radical legislation is at an end. The conservatives are far more skillful fighters than the radicals. The latter include all of the men with advanced ideas, and also some scatter-brained men who would not be trusted by the average man to hold a sound opinion on ordinary relations of employers and employed Hence, with the radicals tending to fly apart among themselves, the conservatives will probably have no difficult task in holding their own during the session. Then will follow the settlement with the body of voters at the polls in November.

This Legislature is not pushing business at all. They are now cutting afternoon sessions of the House off at 3 o'clock, in order to permit the committees to hold afternoon sessions, but only one committee has been in session this afternoon. None is scheduled for to morrow, and the members evidently prefer to get home as soon as they can rather than remain for late trains in order to hear petitioners.

This evening the Western Massachusetts legislators have their first monthly dinner of the session, with the leading officials of the state present. Worcester county has already held one dinner and so have one or two eastern counties. Thus the social part of their duties is well discharged. But these acquaintances doubtless promote legislation, in the long run. LANDON.

A Debt Paid

By WILLIAM BLAKEMAN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Captain Tisdale of the —th United States cavalry, years ago serving on what was then called "the plains," being sent out to reconnoiter the forces of the hostile tribes of Indians, who were at war with each other, came upon a small band of Sioux who were shooting arrows at long distance at an Indian boy they had captured from their enemies. Their object was to torture the boy by making the distance between him and them so great that they would likely fire a long time at him before giving him his death wound. He had been struck several times, but not yet in a vital part.

Captain Tisdale bought the boy for $20. The captive, who was tied to the trunk of a tree, was unbound and taken up by the captain's order behind one of the troopers. Tisdale had no use for his purchase, but if the boy were left to himself he would either die without food or be recaptured, tortured and killed. So the captain decided to keep him with the command and when the troop returned to the fort take him along.

The boy's Indian name being unpronounceable, he was given another—Jim. There was no reason why he should not have been called John or Jack or Joe instead. It happened simply that the captain first thought of Jim. The boy was about fifteen years old, tall and straight and had all the fortitude of his race. When released from being a target, though fainting from loss of blood, he kept a resolute look on his face and did not seem especially pleased that his life had been saved.

Since there was nothing for Jim to do at the fort, Captain Tisdale concluded to make him his servant. Servants were hard to get in western garrisons, and Tisdale, who was a married man, thought Jim would make a good waiter. The captain proposed this to the boy, but received no reply of either assent or dissent. He went about his duties sullenly, but attended to them faithfully. Tisdale was surprised that he displayed no gratitude for the saving of his life, but Tisdale had little faith in the better impulses of the savages and ascribed Jim's apparent indifference to his redskin nature. Mrs. Tisdale went even further. She feared all Indians and dreaded lest they should be murdered by Jim some night and he would be missing in the morning.

Then came news that the tribe by which Jim had been made captive had broken away from their reservation and were roaming about murdering settlers, burning houses and pillaging. All the garrison of Fort —— except a sufficient guard went out to drive the savages back into their proper limits. Captain Tisdale before departing said to Jim:

"Jim, I wish you to be good to Mrs. Tisdale while I am away!"

"Me go, too," replied Jim.

"All right," said the captain, who was fearful of leaving him. "I'll get you a horse from the quartermaster, and you shall be my orderly."

For the first time since Jim had been purchased a light came into his eye.

"You would rather fight than wait on the table, wouldn't you, Jim?" said the captain.

"My father chief!" said Jim proudly.

The change in Jim mounted on a charger from carrying viands on a tray was something wonderful And was he not going to fight the very tribe who had intended to shoot him to death? When the command trotted out of the fort, many of the men sobered by the thought that they might never get back to it, Jim rode behind Captain Tisdale, the light of supreme happiness in his eye.

In those days, though the savages were armed with rifles, they could not always get the requisite ammunition and were obliged to supplement their armament with the bows and arrows. The United States force that marched against them, learning that they were in camp within striking distance, attempted to surprise them in the early morning, but the cavalry were late in getting on the ground and found a force four times their own numbers drawn up to receive them.

During the fight Jim fought like a young devil. But he never left his captain. Tisdale was leading a charge into a nest of Indians when an arrow struck him in the forearm. At the same moment his horse fell dead. Jim like a flash jumped from his own horse, raised his captain, pulled the arrow from the wound, looked at its point and, kneeling by the captain, who was sitting dazed on the ground, began to suck the wound.

The Indians were driven before the advancing force, and when succor arrived for Captain Tisdale he was found in a stupor, Jim beside him chanting his own death song. The boy was recounting the few deeds of valor he had had opportunity to perform in his boyhood, and as part of his song was in English those about knew that his captain had been struck by a poisoned arrow and Jim had sucked the poison into his own system.

A surgeon came and gave both the captain and his young orderly an antidote. Tisdale recovered, but Jim, his system having absorbed most of the poison, sank lower till his song ceased and he was dead.

When the command heard that Jim had died for his captain he was accorded a funeral with military honors.

The Right House

A Man Who Was Taken For a Burglar

By ANNA B. CLARK

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Jack Merton arrived in Chicago at 5 o'clock on a rainy afternoon. His train for the west left at 9, and he was prompted to spend the intervening hours with his cousin. Taking a cab, he was driven to the house.

"No. 232. There she is, the next one to this. I might have recognized the bronze flowerpots on the balcony anyway. Now for a surprise." He ran lightly up the steps of No. 232, pulled out a latchkey he had long carried and inserted it in the lock.

The key fitted easily, and the door swung open, revealing a long expanse of cool dark hall in summer attire of linen coverlugs. There was not a soul in sight. The doors that he remembered led to drawing rooms, library and sitting room were tightly closed.

At this hour Uncle Fred and Peter would probably have returned from the office and, as was their daily custom, would be grilling over the evening papers in the library in the glare of strong electric lights instead of spinning along the lake front watching the sunset after the strenuous day downtown. The Mertons were money grubbers, anyway, with but little eye for beauty. Nevertheless money grubbing had not affected the warmth of their big hearts, and this was unusual.

Jack strode down the hall, softly turned the knob of the library door and entered—to find himself in the mellow, subdued light of a solitary lamp on the writing desk. Out of the surrounding shadows a darker shape flitted and then came forward, revealing the straight, slim figure of a girl in a soft black gown, with a string of pearls around her white throat and dusky masses of hair framing the loveliest face Jack had ever seen—a face lighted by glorious hazel eyes and tinted with exquisite color.

The hazel eyes met Jack's fearlessly, and he was conscious of a quick movement of her right hand; then he found himself looking into the menacing barrel of a small revolver.

"What do you want here?" asked the girl quietly.

Forgetful of his clandestine entrance, Mr. Merton drew himself up proudly. "Rather an original method of welcoming a guest," he said lightly.

"Rather an original method of paying a call," retorted the girl. "You see, I heard you enter the house."

"How did you know it was not Mr. Merton—or his son?" asked Jack, with amusement.

"Merton?" The girl lifted her fine black brows questioningly. "You have made a mistake; there are no Mertons here."

Jack stared. "Then I am in the wrong house. Isn't this No. 232?" he asked bluntly.

"Yes."

"My uncle has lived here for twenty-five years. Surely there can be no mistake. You see, I just came in from the east, and while waiting for western connections I ran up here to surprise them. Here is the latchkey I have carried for ten years past. It fitted the door, and so I came in, expecting to find my relatives here." He stopped abruptly at the slightly scornful expression on the girl's face. "Perhaps you don't believe me?" he asked scornfully.

For answer the girl pushed a newspaper across the table and pointed at the large half tone portrait of a man occupying the center of the front page. It was evident that she had been reading the paper when he entered and had slipped into the shadow of a tall screen at the sound of his approaching steps down the hall.

Jack picked up the paper and carried it nearer the light, the girl still covering him with the little revolver. The young man uttered a slight exclamation and studied the picture and the surrounding text with amazed eyes and parted lips.

There before him was what might have been a portrait of himself, fair, keen face, handsome nose and fine eyes, with the careless toss of hair above. The black type underneath proclaimed this the picture of "Fussy Harry," the slickest gentleman burglar out of jail, and it was the purpose of the article to warn the public against his early arrival in Chicago—and to endeavor to place the gentleman burglar behind the bars as speedily as might be accomplished.

The girl nodded.

"I don't wonder you thought I might be—let me see—Fussy Harry! I'll confess that we look enough alike to be brothers—twins, in fact—but I'm not vain, you know, only have I got that ratty look in my eyes?"

"I'd rather not say," returned the girl shortly. "You must understand that I'm not going to let you get away. The paper says you have committed murder—you are wanted for numerous burglaries and"—

"I suppose you intend to call up the police station and turn me over to the authorities. Well, do so! I can prove my identity, but not before I have been held up to suspicion, my name bandied from one end of the reer ruined. Well, let 'er go!" said Mr. land to the other and my future ca- Merton recklessly.

He leaned against the wall, with folded arms, and surveyed the carpet gloomily.

"If you wouldn't mind sitting down so I can rest my elbow on the desk. It tires my arm holding this thing out so. Thank you," she said as Jack obediently sank into a chair.

"If you're going to call the police I hope you won't mind doing so at once, because if I can clear myself in time I want to catch the 9:30 western express."

"I have called them," hesitated the girl.

"How?"

"As soon as you came in I found the buzzer on the burglar alarm that connects with the police station and signaled. They should be here very soon." She was quite white now, and the hand that held the revolver trembled visibly.

"Is there a telephone in this room?" asked Jack presently.

"Yes," replied the girl.

"You wouldn't let me call up central and discover where my cousins, the Mertons, are? If I'm in the wrong house, why"—

"Is there any doubt about that?" Her face was slightly contemptuous.

"A good deal of doubt," asserted Jack boldly. "This room is as familiar to me as my own home. I've spent weeks here. I know every chair and table, for the Mertons are not given to changing their furniture. If you would take the trouble to look you might find a picture of me somewhere about the premises."

"I think not, except here." She laid her hand on the paper, with a provoking smile.

"Do you mean to tell me that this is not Mr. Fred Merton's house?" demanded Jack.

"Really, if it's any advantage for you to know, I wish I could tell you the name of the owner; only, you see, my friends have rented it furnished for the summer season, and I only arrived this morning, and I did not hear the name of the owner if it has been mentioned. And so it is possible that this is Mr. Merton's house. I daresay you are quite familiar with a good many houses"—

"Let up on that!" growled Jack, quite out of temper. "No use hitting a fellow when he's down, you know."

"I beg your pardon," said the girl, her face coloring adorably, "but you must think me very mean. I've really been talking at random. I thought I heard a sound"— Her head was bent in a listening attitude.

"Burglars!" suggested Jack, with a grim smile. "Or, what might be worse for me, police—ugh!"

A strained look came into the girl's face as footsteps advanced swiftly down the hall toward the door. She arose and leaned toward her captive.

"I'm sorry. I hope you'll come out all right. I wish it had not been I who had to"—

"Thanks," said Jack dryly. "I'll probably come out after I've served time! As in the case of the girl in the musical comedy song, you know, 'I must be captured by somebody, and it may as well be you.' Well, here goes!"

There was the sound of voices outside the door—feminine voices—and then the door opened and skirts rustled silkily forward.

"Jean, you poor child, were you frightened to death staying all alone here. Mercy, what's this? Oh, put down that pistol!"

Three young women, pretty as pictures, handsomely gowned, fluttered toward the loveliest girl of all as she dropped the revolver to the desk. She arose and pointed a slim forefinger toward Jack Merton.

"That is Fussy Harry, wanted by the police. I have captured him"—She fainted away then, and it was Jack's privilege to gather her up and lay her on the leather couch before confronting the bevy of hysterical girls, who had fled to a distant corner.

"I'm Jack Merton," began that gentleman with what dignity he could assume, "and I've been trying to persuade this young lady that"—

"Of course it's Jack," cried the tallest girl, tossing back her veil. "It's Peter's cousin. Tell me what has happened."

Jack found his hands grasped by the welcoming hands of his cousin, Peter's bride, and he found no difficulty in convincing his listeners of his identity. The girl on the couch was recovering and sat up, listening to the conversation with flaming cheeks and sparkling eyes.

"We went to the matinee and left Jean alone. All the servants were out. She's been reading that lurid newspaper and—well, really, Mr. Merton, it does look like you," explained Mrs. Fancher when Mrs. Peter had made the proper introductions. "I don't wonder Jean was frightened. But what pluck she had! Just fancy holding that revolver, and it is loaded, girls. No; there is no burglar alarm. What a fib, Jean! Of course she didn't know the name of Merton. We just met Mrs. Peter downtown and dragged her up. They're staying at the shore and"— So the explanations went on, and after a little while Jack found himself sitting down beside Jean Innes trying to make his peace with that disconcerted little lady.

"And so your home is in San Francisco?" he asked delightedly. "Why, that's where I'm going to live. I hadn't counted on such good luck—having a friend there, you know."

"I'm so sorry," faltered Jean, with a soft shyness in her tender eyes.

"I'm not," asserted Jack, "and I'm sure you would have captured me sooner or later. You'll find me the most willing victim." And the look in her eyes satisfied Jack that he had entered the right house after all.

Spoiled the Solemnity.

Joseph H. Choate when ambassador to the court of St. James and Mark Twain were together in St. George's chapel, London, one hot day, both seemingly sobered by the solemnity of the place.

"What an awful thing it is"— Twain began in a whisper.

Mr. Choate leaned closer to catch some ponderously sad expression from the humorist.

"What an awful thing it is," Twain repeated, "to be shut up in a place where one cannot smoke."

Beyond the Styx.

"I did," answered the shade of Washington, "but between you and me I'd hate to be even a stepfather to some of the cities therein today."—Exchange.

The Rivals

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

John Andrews and Tom Hutchins were bosom friends till they both fancied the same girl. Before either of them had met Lucy Boughton they were inseparable. Usually the trouble with girls in such cases is that they won't show a preference. Lucy showed a preference for both the friends. One day she would be very sweet to Andrews, the next to Hutchins. There is nothing like uncertainty to sharpen love, and nothing will break up a friendship either between two men or two women than a rivalry for the affections of the same person. So John and Tom first began to show a coolness, then to scowl at each other when they met, and finally they were ready to take each other's heart's blood.

One evening John went to see Lucy and remained with her till 11 o'clock. When he went away, though he had not proposed to her, he considered the matter settled between them. He was unable to support a wife, and this was the reason why he had said nothing about marriage. He intended to see her again soon, confess that he loved her and ask her if she would wait till he could better his affairs.

The very next afternoon he received a shock. Walking along a road, Tom and Lucy passed him in a buggy. Tom scowled at him, but Lucy smiled very sweetly. What did it mean? Was the girl deceiving him? He brooded over the matter, and instead of going to her for information he endeavored to get it from Tom. The next day, meeting Tom, he said:

"Have a pleasant ride yesterday?"

"Yes; very."

"Anything between you and Lucy?"

"What's that to you?"

"A good deal. I'm about to come to an understanding with her."

"I don't know but I'll come to an understanding with her myself, Jack," said Tom, suddenly changing his tone, "let's go into the wood there where no one will see us and have it out. If you make me cry 'nuff' I'll leave the field to you. If you make me cry 'nuff' I take a back seat and let you do the driving."

"Agreed!"

The two young men penetrated a wood nearby, Tom leading the way, till they reached an open space, where he stopped, and they took off their coats and squared up against each other. John drew first blood from his chum's nose, and Tom drew second blood from his chum's lip. Then they both clinched, and Tom very nearly gonged out John's eye. John at the same time biting off a piece of Tom's ear. They fell, John on top.

"Got enough?" he asked.

"No."

Five minutes later Tom got John off and under.

"Got enough?" he asked.

"No."

They couldn't very well kill each other without any weapons except their fists, but they tired each other out. John succeeded in throwing off Tom, but he hadn't the strength to follow up the advantage. Tom lay still—he could neither renew the combat nor rise.

Ten minutes later Tom sat up.

"John," he said, "I got an idea."

John gave a responsive grunt.

"I'm thinking the girl had better decide between us."

"And I'm thinking you'd better have thought of that before instead of proposing to come here and have it out."

"Let's get up and go home."

"I'm willing."

They got up and dragged themselves away. They were about to climb a fence to cross a field when they saw the object of their quarrel in the center of the inclosure. A bull was behind her, and she had evidently arrested his attention. Presently he began to trot toward her.

"You've said you're about to fix it up with her," said John. "You better run for her before the bull gores her."

"I thought you were counting on her. I wouldn't stand in your way for the world."

Meanwhile the bull was galloping behind the unconscious girl. Death did not stare her in the face, but in the back. Without interference the bull would surely kill her.

Suddenly a man with a pitchfork jumped over the fence on the opposite side of the field, ran for the bull and turned him against himself. With a few jabs the man put the bull to flight. Lucy had turned, and when the bull left she fell into the man's arms.

Here was a common enemy to unite the rivals. With one accord they got over the fence and hobbled toward Lucy. They were so intent upon seeing her in another's arms they forgot that they were covered with dirt and blood. Disabled as they were, it required some time for them to reach their objective point, and when they did Lucy had disengaged herself and when she saw them had so far recovered from her fright as to burst out laughing.

"Howde, boys?" said the man who had saved her life. "Been fighting?"

"Yes!" John admitted sullenly.

"Reckon it's been about Lucy. I've heard about you two. But you needn't trouble yourselves; she's mine."

The rivals looked at Lucy.

"Sorry I hadn't told you before," she said. "It would have saved your clothes."

Atlas and His Load.

Strictly speaking, "atlas" is a misnomer for a map book, since it was not the world, but the heavens, that the "atlas" of mythology upheld. Mercator, the famous Dutch geographer, who made globes for Emperor Charles V. of Germany, was the first to use the name in this connection, choosing it as a convenient and in some sort an appropriate title, because Atlas, the demigod, figures with a world upon his shoulders as a frontispiece of some early works on geography.

Atlas, it was said, made war with other Titans upon Zeus and, being conquered, was condemned to bear heaven upon his head and hands. Later tradition represented him as a man changed by means of Medusa's head into a mountain, upon which rested heaven and all its stars.

In any case, Atlas was always associated with a heavy burden strongly borne. Thus Shakespeare makes Warwick say to Gloucester:

It is not difficult to see how by an association of ideas this came to be chosen as the name for a book of maps which upholds and exhibits to us the whole world.

A Novel For Tennyson.

Tennyson would have scouted the idea of a limit of 150,000 words for novels. William Allingham notes in his diary on Aug. 28, 1880, when on a visit to Farringford: "Tennyson is a constant novel reader and says: 'What I dislike is beginning a new novel. I should like to have a novel to read in a million volumes to last me my life.'" —London Chronicle.

WORSE EVERY YEAR.

Plenty of Palmer Readers Have the Same Experience.

Don't neglect an aching back.

It will get worse every year.

Backache is really kidney ache.

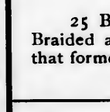
If you don't other kidney ills follow.



A Palmer citizen tells you how—the cure is easy.

Mrs. W. H. King, Main St., Palmer, Mass., says: "I suffered from kidney disease for years and was constantly growing worse. I was never free from a dull, bearing-down pain in my back and the passages of the kidney secretions were too frequent. My head ached and I was subject to dizzy spells. To-day my kidneys are normal, the pains have lost their severeness and my back is strong. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured from Lynde & Gould's Drug Store, deserve the credit for bringing about this change and I am very grateful to them. I am pleased to recommend this remedy to other kidney sufferers."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Penny Savings Stamp Record.

The penny savings system which was instituted in the schools a few years ago has proved very satisfactory in this village. The past six months has, with one exception, been the best of any six months since the system was started. The following is a record for the past six months, compared with the same period a year ago:

The Epworth League social, which was to have been held Tuesday evening in the vestry of the M E. church, was postponed, owing to the inclement weather. It is now planned to hold the meeting next Tuesday evening at the same place.

The committee of arrangements in charge of the bazar to be given in St Bartholomew's church Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Feb. 22 and 23, are working hard to make the event a success. The books in charge of the young people for the soliciting of funds are being rapidly filled.

The many friends in this village of Rev. Thomas S. Donoghue of Thorndike, who was injured in Holyoke a week ago, while attending the funeral of Mgr E. S. Fitzgerald, pastor of Our Lady of the Rosary church, were very sorry to hear of his accident and are much pleased to learn of his recovery.

The first real storm of the winter came Monday. The snow furnished the first sleighing of the year, and although the roads were scratchy in places many availed themselves the opportunity for a ride. The snow that came Wednesday greatly improved the situation and real good sleighing is now enjoyed.

THE CURSE OF GOLD

By CARL SARGENT CHASE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I am an old woman, and it is strange to look back and consider what I was when I was young and how absolutely passed away is that world in which I then lived. A stranger matter is that I passed out of it when it still existed. I was considered dead.

I am a Russian by birth and when I was growing up to womanhood imbibed the ideas of a band that were then called nihilists. They have since become revolutionists in Russia, but in other countries the most desperate wing of the sect are anarchists. I was then too young to discriminate between the different beliefs; but, having always been very poor, I readily fell in with those who believed the poor suffer a great injustice on the part of the rich and that the wealth of the world should be divided up among the poor. With this object in view governments which protect the rich should be destroyed.

I had not been a nihilist long before I was ordered to assassinate the minister of the interior. A member of the circle to which I belonged was a friend of and trusted by the minister. This friend was to secure me a position as nurse in the victim's family and I was to poison him.

A few days after I received the order a letter came from America, where an uncle of mine had gone when a boy, stating that he had died and left me a large fortune. What a wonderful change the announcement made in me! Far from thinking that I should divide with the poor, I thought that my fortune should be my own.

How I left Russia secretly, how I reached America and was put in possession of my fortune I will not give here. No one but myself knew of my inheritance till after it had been paid me. But I was sure that it would serve to identify me and that some one would be sent to inflict upon me a sentence of death for not having carried out the edict of the society.

I converted my fortune—it amounted to $100,000—into gold. I could get no interest on gold, but I did not dare to purchase securities, for my name must appear on them. Even if I put my money in a savings bank, taking a book in lieu of a receipt, I could not get it back without signing my name.

And now began the most dreadful period of my life, dreadful in this—I must spend money to live besides money to go from place to place, for I dared not remain in one location. I was therefore obliged to draw on my capital. Besides this, I must take care of and move my gold, which was very heavy. I was in constant dread not only of robbery, but that while traveling my gold would be lost. I had a very strong ironbound trunk made, padded inside, and in this I put my gold in little bags, each bag containing a thousand dollars. This trunk I never lost sight of and was continually troubled about it. Sometimes the strangeness of my position would occur to me. I had believed that the poor should take away the possessions of the rich, and here was I, rich, continually on the rack about my possessions. Miserable as I had been in poverty, I sometimes envied my former lot. This money that had seemed so desirable to me, what comfort was I getting out of it? Carting around a trunk that I was constantly afraid I would lose or would betray me was certainly no pleasure.

Ten years of this kind of life passed, during which on several occasions I met my own countrymen who I knew were nihilists. Finally I met a Russian friend who had no affiliation with the nihilists. She agreed to write to those I had left behind that she had seen me in a hospital, where I was lying at the point of death, and that I had died there. She afterward told me that her story was believed and I would soon be forgotten both by those who loved me and those who had condemned me.

I saw now a new life before me. I took another name and invested my money, of which I had $85,000 left. But I lived an exile's life and did not make friends. My money could not give me happiness. I tried to interest myself in banks, but I had not been educated, and I took no interest in them. Time hung heavy on my hands.

One day I went past a factory. Working girls were coming out, and none of them had the unhappy face that I had. I thought of the day when I, too, was a working girl and realized that, after all, I was happier then than I was now. If I could only be occupied the days would not seem so long to me.

The next day I went to the factory where I had seen the girls and asked for a position without pay till I could learn the work to be done. My offer was accepted, and I went to work the next morning.

I worked for five years, then married a fellow laborer. Since my marriage my occupation has been caring for my home and my children. The cursed gold left me by my uncle is accumulating. No one living but myself knows of it. I don't know what to do with it. Labor alone keeps us contented. I do not wish my children to receive a cent of my fortune.

It has been a curse to me, and I dread lest it be a curse to them. I would not object to their receiving it when they become old enough to know something of how it may be made a benefit.

Making a Cake With the Bible.

The following unique recipe for Scripture cake is copied from an old English cookbook. For the ingredients and directions for making the cake you must refer to the Bible, in the chapters and verses given here with. It may be added that by carefully following the directions you will be able to make a most delicious cake—the very best thing for a Sunday afternoon tea:

Four and a half cups of I Kings iv, 22; half pound Judges v, 25; two cups Jeremiah vi, 20; two cups Nahum iii, 12; two cups I Samuel xxx, 12; two cups Numbers xvii, 8; two teaspoonfuls I Samuel xiv, 25; to taste, II Chronicles ix, 9; six Jeremiah xvii, 11; one and a half cups Judges iv, 19; two teaspoonfuls Amos iv, 5; one pinch Leviticus ii, 13; directions, Proverbs xxiii, 14; bake one and a half to two hours. Baking powder may be used instead of yeast or leaven, as it is termed in the Bible.

The Handkerchief Came From Italy.

A writer in a French review points out that the handkerchief does not come to us from China, as has been generally believed, but from Italy. It is only 300 years ago that the handkerchief of a Venetian lady was considered a great curiosity. The handkerchief crossed the Alps and was received with great favor at the court of France. Handkerchiefs were then made of cambric or lawn and bordered with Venetian or Alencon lace. Under Henry III. of France the sachet was introduced. The handkerchief was taken into Germany a little later and was known as the "fazalletin," after its Italian name. Only persons of quality used it, and an edict in 1595 was published at Dresden interdicting the use of the handkerchief among the trading classes.—London Globe.

Careful of His Gun.

In one of the small mountain towns of Kentucky lived Dan, a half wit, with whom the boys often went hunting. On one of these trips Dan and the young man with him were between two hills when a rabbit jumped up in front of them and ran up the hill to Dan's right. The other fellow, being on Dan's left, did not wish to take the chance of shooting at the rabbit for fear of an accident, so he said: "There he goes, Dan! Shoot him, shoot him!" But Dan simply stood still and watched the rabbit disappear over the hill, and his partner wanted to know why he didn't shoot. After a moment's silence he answered, talking through his nose: "Did you take me for a fool? Do you think I was going to strain my gun shooting uphill?"—Judge.

Brown—"Wouldn't you like to have an Arctic home-coming?" White—"I've had the next thing to it when I've come home late and found my wife sitting up for me."—Harper's Bazar

First Quality Furs at Factory Clearance Prices, Which Merely Cover Actual Cost

At this time of the year it is chiefly a matter of cleaning up the factory's supply of skins for the season, selling the Furs at practically cost-price rather than have any skins left over. But instead of repeating the present styles, these newly made Furs are fashioned in next winter's best styles. Recent shipments have swelled assortments to fullest completeness, making the stock probably the largest it has been any time this year—and we always have the largest and most varied Fur exhibition in the city throughout the Fur season; for this is an exclusively Fur Store. In a word, there are hundreds of Fur Bargains, and each one is the biggest that has been offered anywhere in this section this winter. That we sold more Furs during the first week of this sale than during any other week this year plainly attests the foregoing truth. MAN AFRAID TO GO HOME.

Polish Residents Assemble at Three Rivers.

BUT OFFER ONLY LOUD ANATHEMAS.

Church Members Show Their Disapproval Of Collector Appointed by Priest.

The street near the gates of the Palmer Mill in Three Rivers was the scene Wednesday evening of a disturbance by Polish residents, which for a time seemed to promise bodily harm to one man, but which proved to be nothing more serious than an effort to convince the man of the disapproval of the members of the crowd of certain of his actions having to do with his church duties. There were boots and jeers for the man under the displeasnre of the assemblage, and he was for a time reluctant to leave for his home; but the crowd was finally dispersed by Officer M. J. Sullivan and the man made his way peacefully to his family

The tronble originated, as near as can be ascertained, over the finances of the church of St. Peter and Paul, the Polish Catholic church at Four Corners, of which Rev. W. Lenz is pastor The finances of this church are managed after the nsnal manner, but the congregation evidently wishes to know how much money is collected and how it is disbursed and wished to have the collectors for the church chosen by the people instead of having them appointed by Fr. Lenz. The demonstration Wednesday night was against one of the collectors. Some time ago one of the collectors resigned and Albert Ckowaro was appointed in his place. He served on Snnday of last week, bnt his selection did not meet with the approval of the malcontents. He resigned after a stone had been thrown into his bedroom one cold night and for this bit of pleasantry John Tarka paid a fine of $20 in the district court. Objection was next made to Antoni Wilkes, who has been serving for abont four years, but he decided to continue in the position.

Notices in Polish, printed with a rnbber stamp, calling the Polish people to make a demonstration at the mill gates Tuesday evening against the collector, were posted early in the week where they wonld be seen by the Polish people. The crowd gathered, but were dispersed by Officer Sullivan without any serious difficnlty and there was no demonstration beyond some slight jeering as Wilkes left his work. Another notice called another crowd Wednesday evening. Wilkes knew of this and jnst before closing went to the mill office to report the situation. The mill closed while he was there, and as he had been seen to go to the office the crowd gathered ontside. Wilkes stated that he was afraid to go ont into the crowd, and was told by F. A Upbam, who was abont to go to the station, that he might remain in the office. Mr. Upham had proceeded but a short distance when he fonnd Wilkes with him. The crowd was hooting and jeering Wilkes, but offered no violence. Officer Snllivan got into the crowd and ordered the people to disperse. Wilkes kept near Mr. Upham and the officer until nearly to the depot, when he was escorted home by the officer.

It is probable that the matter will be allowed to rest for a time at least, as it was agreed yesterday afternoon at a meeting of some of the Polish people that the matter shonld be dropped nntil the return of Bishop Beaven of Springfield, when it will be snbmitted to him.

WANTED TO BE A HERO.

Ware Young Man Puts Bullet Through His Arm.

AND CLAIMED HIGHWAYMAN DID IT.

But Failed to Impress Officers and Was Assessed $25 For Carrying Revolver.

Fred Minnie, 21, shot himself in the npper arm Tuesday evening on Greenwich Village road, abont two miles out of Ware, with a 32-calibre revolver, and then rushed to the town and reported to the police that he had been held np by a man wearing a black mask, who shot him when he refused to give him his money.

Chief B. W. Buckley of Ware went with him to the office of Dr. W. W. Miner, who dressed the wound The chief did not believe Minnie's story, but made an investigation of the spot while Minnie was in the doctor's office. When the chief returned he charged Minnie with lying, but the young man insisted that his story was true and Dr. Miner told the chief that be thonght the wound could hardly have been self inflicted. Chief Buckley was not convinced and took Minnie to the police station for further examination, and finally Minnie admitted to the chief that he had really shot himself.

Minnie was taken in a team to the spot where he bad stepped out of the highway and done the shooting. The chief, when he had investigated the road previously, had failed to find any trace of a second person, and was not surprised when Minnie confessed that the story of the highwayman was a fabrication. Minnie would not admit that he had framed np the story before doing the shooting, and the only explanation offered is that of Chief Buckley, that Minnie bad a desire to become a detective and wished to appear qualified to act the part Minnie told quite a story of the fight he had put up, and held out for some time that his story was correct. He lives on a farm with his father in the west part of Hardwick, bnt has lived in Ware and is known by many in that town. The bullet went throngh the arm, but the wound was not serious.

Minnie was brought into the district court Wednesday morning to answer to a charge of carrying a loaded revolver. He pleaded guilty and the minimum fine of $25 was imposed and the case was continued until August 16 for payment. Judge Davis told the yonng man that only the poor health of his mother saved him from spending the next six months in the Northampton jail. Minnie told the court that he shot himself by accident and then told the holdup story because he did not wish his people to know the truth.

To Protect Trout Streams.

Trout fishermen are requested to watch out for sawdust pollution in the streams frequented by trout. Many wood-lots are being cut down and portable sawmills are constructed along-side the streams. Large quantities of sawdust are allowed to collect and eventually get into the stream, thereby causing loss of trout, as was the case recently in the Barleigh brook, when 62 handsome trout were fonnd dead in various pools along the stream from this cause. Any streams affected by sawdust pollution should be reported at once to Deputy Luman in order that they may not be rnined so far as fish life is concerned.

WATER FOR TOWN FARM.

Overseers Say New System Must Be Provided.

SPRINGS DRY SINCE LAST AUGUST.

All Water Hauled Since Then. Springs On Town Land Which Might Be Developed.

The overseers of the poor have a problem on their hands which has given them no little trouble, and which they will ask the voters at the annual town meeting to solve, and that is the question of a water supply for the town farm

The water supply at the farm gave out some time in August, according to one member of the board of overseers, and since that time what water has been used in the house has had to be hauled from a spring on the premises below the house, the location being so low that it cannot be made to flow into the buildings. The supply for a number of years has come from springs near the house which have furnished power for two hydraulic rams, these pnmping the water to the house and barn. Last summer however these springs went dry, and since that time all water for domestic uses has had to be drawn by team.

It is understood that the overseers have no particular recommendation to make to the voters, leaving them to settle the question. There is, however, a large spring on the farm, located at some distance from the buildings, which the board think might be made to furnish all the water needed with a clearing out and the construction of a concrete retaining reservoir. This spring was investigated abont five years ago, when there was a scarcity of water for a time in the summer; at that time it was deemed ample for the farm use, but nothing was done toward developing it. It is understood that this spring has never run dry, even when all other sources failed

PALMER NEWS.

Town Offices to be Filled.

List of Officials Whose Terms Expire. Treasurership Possibilities.

It will not be long before nominations must be made for the annual election March 20, but as yet little is heard regarding possible candidates for the numerous places which must be filled. In additiou to the usual one-year places, the three-years term of the following expire this year: Assessors, H. T. Bishop; overseers of poor, A. A. Warriner; school committee, G. D. Mooers, James Wilson; board of health, Dr. S. O Miller.

So far, little has been heard regarding possible candidates. It is certain that F A Upham and John Millerick of the board of selectmen will not be candidates for re-election; neither will A. A. Warriner run again for overseers of the poor; he has served on the board many years and feels that he has earned a release. E. B. Taylor will not consider again the town treasurership. It has been reported that W. E. McDonald and Colin Oakes would decline reelection on the board of license commissioners, but both deny having made such a statement and there is no reason to believe their services cannot be retained if the voters so desire. Messrs Mooers and Wilson on the school committee and Dr. Miller on the board of health will presumably succeed themselves, as will H T. Bishop as assessor. Beyond these no suggestions have been heard other than for the office of town treasurer These names have been mentioned as possible candidate for the position: W. E McDonald, Charles K Stone, F. J. Hamilton, J. F. Foley, George Clough, H. C Ellithorpe Mr. Clough has announced his candidacy for the position, the others are "mentioned" only; who will finally be selected as the candidate or candidates—if both parties make nominations—remains to be seen. With the separation of the license granting from the selectmen's duties, it seems probable that the contest in the election will center on the board of license commissioners, but not a word has been made public along this line so far except from those who last year worked for the election of the present board, and that is to the effect that their services are desired another year.

Articles For Town Warrant

Must be in Hands of Selectmen Not Later Than Next Wednesday.

The selectmen announce that all articles for insertion in the warrant for the annual town meeting must be in their hands by Wednesday of next week, as they will meet that evening to make up the warrant

While the selectmen may legally refuse to insert in the warrant articles which are not indorsed by ten voters of the town, they announce that any reasonable article will be inserted on request of any person; this does not apply to men only, but women may present articles as well. This will give opportunity for the various village improvement committees connected with women's clubs and organizations to have ideas which they may have considered by the voters. In this connection it may be well to call attention of the voters to the policy adopted by the town in recent years, of refusing to consider at special town meetings articles for sidewalks, sewers, and the like which call for a material expenditure of money, there being a feeling that these should be disposed of only at the annual meeting except in cases of extreme necessity. Accordingly, persons who have special matters which they wish considered by the voters will do well to see that they are in the hands of the selectmen next Wednesday. The warrant will be published March 3, in time to give the committee of fifteen ample opportunity to weigh carefully the articles.

Business Club Entertains.

Henry Hobbs Talks on Athletics. New Members Admitted. Lunch.

There was a large attendance at the monthly meeting of the Palmer Business and Social Club Tuesday evening, the occasion being the first of a series of talks by outsiders. The speaker this week was Henry Hobbs, formerly of Thorndike and later one of the star players on the Yale football team. His subject was athletics, and he gave an interesting account of the workings of college football, the requirements for "making" the team, the working out of the squad, and how the men are trained, as well as numerous incidents connected with the season's work. He held the close attention of his hearers for a long time while he talked in an informal way, and was given a hearty round of applause at the close of his remarks. At the business meeting previous to the address, twelve new names were admitted to membership, and the trustees were given the sum of $350 with which to make repairs and purchase new furnishings for the club rooms. A lunch was served.

What's In a Name?

The late king of Siam had for a full name Phra Bat Somdeth Phra Paramiuor Maha Chulalongkorn Phra Chulin Chum Klo Chow Yu Hua, and this does not include his titles. A wag in Bombay saw it in the paper when the ruler was visiting that city and was being received by the British officials and passed it over to a young Irish subaltern with the challenge that he pronounce it. The young fellow looked at it a moment and then handed it back. He said he was not long enough winded, but he was sure he could play it on the garrison club piano if the instrument were a couple of octaves longer. The king's uncle, however, who was also a prince high priest, had for one name alone the following collection of letters: Pawaratsawariyalongkaun. Any one who can get through this and not flat one of the notes has lived a long time where he can look out of the window and see the gilded peak of a temple shimmering in the equatorial sun.—Christian Herald.

Starve a Cold.

Nature, as a rule, takes the appetite away when one is coming down with a cold or other infectious disease, and nature is wise. Don't coax Mary to eat when she has a cold. Don't allow the neighbors to tempt Johnny with calf's foot jelly or other dainties. When suffering from a cold the digestive organs are in no condition to care for food. The digestive juices are altered or entirely absent. One or two days' comparative fast will often assist in averting a severe siege of cold. A more convenient and enjoyable form of fasting would be to subsist for one or two days upon fruit or fruit juices perhaps, with the addition of a little toast. An exclusive fruit diet has all the practical advantages of complete fasting, while it satisfies the appetite and supplies sugar from which the liver can manufacture glycogen to sustain the white blood corpuscles in their continuous warfare against microbes.—William S. Sadler in Desiguer

Giving Him Carte Blanche.

A few years ago John Kendrick Bangs, the humorist, told a number of his Broadway literary confreres that he felt particularly elated over an order he had just received from Henry W. Savage, the theatrical producer, for the libretto of a musical comedy. The play was produced a few months later. During the long period of rehearsals so much of Bangs' material was eliminated and so much other material inserted in its stead that when the curtain went up on the first night not more than half a dozen of the original lines remained.

About a week later a friend, meeting Bangs, asked him if he was writing any more plays for Savage.

"Yes," replied Bangs. "Only an hour ago I sent him 5.0 blank sheets of paper and told him to go as far as he liked."—Irvin Cobb in New York Tribune.

The Washington Room

A Story For Washington's Birthday

By CLARISSA MACKIE

[Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.]

"AND so you want to marry my niece?" said Jeremiah Parrish irritably.

"Yes, sir," said Peter Elmore, looking into the old man's black eyes with a clear, direct glance.

"And you are a lawyer? Remember, please, that my niece has become engaged to you while on a visit to the city and, although she has known you for several years, you are a comparative stranger to me. Now, you are a lawyer! I hope you are a good one."

CLARISSA MACKIE.

The young man winced under the cool arrogance in Mr. Parrish's harsh voice, but he merely smiled as he answered, "I hope to prove to you some day that I am, sir."

"Oh, you do, eh? Perhaps I will give you an opportunity now. You may be able to solve the mystery of our guest chamber!"

"Oh, Uncle Jerry, that is not fair!" cried Mildred reproachfully from her seat near the fire. "Peter is a lawyer—not a detective! No one ever solved it, and remember how many people have tried in the last hundred years." Mildred rose and leaned against the high back of her lover's chair.

Elmore had not spoken. His keen blue eyes were fixed on the forbidding countenance of Jeremiah Parrish, and he noted a cunning little smile lurking about the thin lips.

"Perhaps Mr. Parrish will give me an opportunity of proving myself," he said lightly. "Just now I do not recollect ever having heard of the Washington room in your house."

"Oh, George Washington slept there once—the winter the army suffered at Valley Forge. My great-great-grandmother was sewing carpet rags with her black servant when the two women heard the sound of horses' hoofs on the frozen ground. Always fearful of the coming of the British, my ancestress hastily gathered her store of silver teaspoons and several hundred pound notes and told black Mirandy to secrete them, while she answered the thundering knock which reverberated through the house.

"To her relief, it was General Washington and several of his aids, who requested shelter for the night. In the temporary absence of her husband she bade them welcome, and, delighted at the honor, she hastened to set her best before them.

"She found black Mirandy cowering foolishly in a corner of the best room and half dead from fright. The woman could not recollect what she had done with the spoons or with the banknotes, and to this day their disappearance is a mystery.

"The great general slept in the best room that night, and ever since then the room, with its contents, has been regarded as a state apartment. Washington was much interested in the disappearance of the treasures, and it is said that on the night of the 22d of February he is often seen about the apartment searching hither and thither for the heirlooms which Mirandy hid away."

"Perhaps you will permit me to sleep in that room tonight," suggested Elmore carelessly.

"Certainly," responded his host grimly. "I will go at once and give instructions to have the bed aired and thoroughly warmed."

When he had departed Mildred resumed her low seat near the fire, and Elmore dropped on an ottoman beside her. The girl's sweet face was very grave as she slipped her hand in her lover's broad palm.

"I wish Uncle Jerry had not told you about the room," she said earnestly. "So many have tried to solve the mystery, and, while none of them will tell their actual experience, there is always an estrangement with Uncle Jerry afterward. He hates lawyers—why I don't know—and if he can humiliate one he is delighted. Except on that one subject he is the dearest old man! Sometimes I wish George Washington had never slept in the house!"

THE LIGHT FELL ON HIS STERN PROFILE.

Elmore laughed heartily, and he was reviving her drooping spirits when the door opened and Jeremiah Parrish appeared holding a lighted candle in a silver candlestick. The light fell on his stern profile for one instant, and in that brief interval Elmore's keen eyes sharpened into points of flame.

"In a hurry to go to bed?" he asked quizzically.

"Eager to solve the mystery and claim the reward," laughed Elmore.

"Ah, yes! I have overlooked that. There must be a reward. If you find the treasure it is yours for a wedding gift. If you are unsuccessful you will wait till Mildred is twenty-five, eh? Four years is not long when one is young!"

"We will take the spoons, thank you, Mr. Parrish," returned Elmore coolly. "And now if you will show me to my room I will get down to business."

He lingered a moment behind the elder man to make his farewells to his sweetheart, and then he followed the flickering candle down a dark passage that led to the old part of the rambling house, which dated back to early colonial days.

Mr. Parrish threw open a low door, and they entered a large, low celled room with yellow painted floor, gay with rag rugs and with a roaring fire in the wide chimney. A huge four post bed with blue hangings stood in one corner, while other bulky pieces of ancient furniture crowded the spaces. Over the mantelpiece was a large life sized copy of the Stuart portrait of Washington.

Parrish nodded. "The women of the household have always preserved them from moths. But I am a bachelor, and Mildred seems to think it foolish to keep those things, so they are all going." There was a tinge of melancholy in the old man's tone, which quickly changed to its usual sarcastic quality.

"That door on the left, Elmore, opens into a small modern bedroom. See? If you find your slumbers disturbed in here I shall not blame you if you seek more congenial quarters. My other guests have always done so."

Elmore laughed as he unfastened his collar. "This is the 22d of February, and it is also my birthday. Perhaps the fates will be kind to me, and we shall need teaspoons, Mr. Parrish!"

"Good luck to you," chuckled the older man as he closed the door behind him.

For a long time Elmore lay silently, thinking of many things that had nothing to do with his present situation, but on the instant that the clock chimed twelve resonant strokes he slipped down toward the foot of his bed and crouched in the shadow of the bed hangings.

WILL JONES

TIED BY HIS COAT-TAILS.

The moonlight shone full on the portrait of Washington. Elmore found himself studying the noble figure with its outstretched hand with almost painful intensity. A shadow blurred the corner by the mantel, and out of its gloom a pale figure came slowly across the room, passing close to the bed, tall and of manly form, in ancient dress of pale gray tint, with powdered hair tied back and thoughtful face just touched by the moonlight.

Elmore braced himself and reached out a strong hand. There was a muffled ejaculation, a brief struggle and the shade of a country's parent was firmly tied by his coattails to the bedpost. A towel bound his protesting hands, and his feet were similarly confined. The strong light of several candles revealed the perturbed countenance of Jeremiah Parrish. His fleeting resemblance to George Washington had disappeared.

Elmore was pawing around in the hamper of rag balls. "If I had been black Mirandy," he panted as he tossed the balls at the feet of the patriot, "I would have hidden the spoons in the first thing at hand, which would have been the rags. Ah, this is a heavy one and hastily wound!"

WILL JONES

THE WEDDING GIFT IS WAITING.

With swift fingers he pulled off the rotting strips of gay woolen and calico. Presently there was a gleam and a spoon tinkled on the floor, and then another and another until a dozen had appeared, and at the very end was a crumpled bunch of paper which unfolded into crisp Bank of England notes.

"Permit me, Mr. Parrish," said Elmore as he liberated the prisoner, "to restore to you your patrimony!"

"I owe you and your profession an apology, Mr. Elmore—Peter, I will say," said Jeremiah Parrish whimsically. "I am somewhat ashamed of my ancestors that the mystery has not been unraveled before. As for my masquerading, that is done in the pure joy of testing the bravery of men."

"Mildred and I will be married at Easter?" stulled Peter.

"When you please," assented Jeremiah kindly. "The wedding gift is waiting—has been waiting for a century and a quarter."

The Fictitious Washington

By WILLIS BROOKS HAWKINS.

[Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.]

BERIAH JENKS was tall and straight,
Though short and badly bent—
By which, if you will kindly wait,
I'll tell you what is meant:
In mind and character he stood
The tallest man in town,
And in impartial hardihood
Was squarely up and down.

WILLIS B. HAWKINS.

For these and other goodly traits
He held a lifslong lease
Upon the people's worldly fates
As justice of the peace
And so administered the laws
That everybody knew
'Twas useless, save with righteous cause,
For any one to sue.

One day the constable arraigned
Josiah Ladd as one
Who had defiantly maintained
That General Washington
Was not the saint that people said'
As in his praise they vied,
But, being only human bred,
Had doubtless erred and lied.

The justice heard the charge and then Delivered his decree.
"This court believes all men are men
With human faults," said he.
"And like enough George Washington
Is being overpraised
Because of victories he won
When Freedom's flag was raised."

The culprit smiled and turned to go,
But stopped at a command.
"And yet," said Justice Jenks, "we know
That, on the other hand,
We must not let mere facts assail
The high ideals of youth.
I therefore send this man to jail
For telling too much truth."

Servant—"Heavens! I have knocked the big flowerpot off the window ledge and it struck a man on the head." Mistress—"What! My beautiful magnolia?"—Pit.

CURRENT EVENTS GUEST NIGHT.

Very Pleasing Program For Invited Friends Tuesday Evening.

The occasion of the annual guest night given by the Current Events Club Tuesday evening marked an event of unusual gayety and brilliancy in the history of the club. The spacious rooms of Miss Cushman's residence were brightly bedecked with a profusion of gay red flowers, befitting St. Valentine's night. The following program was given to the great enjoyment of all the listeners:

Indian Dances.
The Maiden Dance
The Planting of the Corn
The Gift Dance
The War Dance
Pealm-e-squeet

Piano Solo. Hungarian Rhapsody. No. 14 C. Liszt
Miss Bates

Piano Solo. Polonaise. Chopin
Miss Bates

Glimpses of Indian Life with Legends and Melodies on the Harp
Pealm-e-squeet

Piano Solo. Bustle of Spring. Sinding
Miss Bates

Miss Bates is a great favorite in Monson, and her appearance was the signal for much enthusiasm, which heightened visibly after each number. Miss Bates is a thorough artist, and by the faultlessness and brilliancy of her execution delighted and charmed her audience beyond measure.

Miss Mayes, the little Indian maid appeared in the complete costume of the Chippewa tribe to which she belongs, and held everybody enthralled while she told stories and legends which were full of charm, some being very romantic, others wild, stirring and filled with zest. Her personality is striking and compelling, yet possessing withal a sweet wistfulness which renders it most attractive. Her voice is perfectly modulated and she uses very pure English. The little maiden quite captivated all her hearers. The melodies on the harp were exquisitely played with true feeling and spirit, and the fact that they were original with Miss Mayes added to the interest. It is surely a decidedly novel idea to express by the medium of the harp the weird music of the Indians. The dances which followed were given very realistically, each one delineating faithfully the Indian in many attitudes and phases, so that he truly stood out vividly. Miss Mayes gave great pleasure with her original entertainment and held the rapt attention of her audience throughout the evening.

Sandwiches, coffee, ice cream and cakes were served afterward in the dining room the table being elaborately decorated, the principal feature being a tree, upon the branches of which fluttered gaily colored butterflies, hearing upon their wings a valentine for each guest.

BASKETBALL TEAM TARDY.

Comes From Holyoke in Auto and Loses Way, Arriving too Late For Game.

One of the largest crowds of the season to witness a basketball game in Memorial Hall were keenly disappointed last evening, when the St. Jeromes of Holyoke, who were scheduled to play the town team, failed to put in an appearance until 10 o'clock. A game at that late hour was ont of the question, as the large crowd were enjoying themselves dancing. The visiting team came from Holyoke in an antomobile and were lost on the road. No word was received from them and at 9 o'clock the hall was cleared for the dance. The money or tickets which are good for the next game were given back. The next game will be in Memorial Hall Tuesday evening, Feb. 28, with the Qniet Five of Holyoke. This team is to play the St. Jeromes a game next week for a purse of $50 and for the championship of Holyoke. The usual dance will follow the game.

Foresters Hold Banquet.

The sixth aunnal hanquet of Court Monson, Foresters of America, was held in the Century Hotel last evening, 55 members of the court attending. Landlord Rogers served an excellent turkey supper. Chief Ranger Nathaniel J. McAuliffe welcomed the guests and introduced Past Chief Ranger Edward J. Lyons as toastmaster, who filled the position in an excellent manner. The following grand and supreme officers answered to toasts: Grand Chief Ranger William J. Mountain of Gardner, Sub-Grand Chief RangerWilliam J. Mitchell of Cambridge, Deputy Grand Chief Ranger John J. Donahue of Palmer and John E. Murray of Winchendon. James J. Burdick, the treasnrer of the local court, talked at some length on the history of the court. The court was organized February 20, 1905, with a charter membership of 47. The present membership is 109, and there is a balance on hand in the treasnry of $1373.35, all of which has been obtained through the regular membership dues. The society have not yet attempted to run a dance or entertainment of any kind, but are making plans beginning next year to have a concert and ball each year. After the supper the meeting adjourned to the parlors where music and singing were enjoyed.

Barn Burned.

A barn owned by Ralph Waterman on his property on the Stafford road was hurned to the ground late Saturday night. The fire was discovered abont 9 o'clock by some people who were driving hy and on seeing the blaze aroused the Waterman family. The fire had gained such headway that it was impossible to save the building. A saw mill, owned by H. D. Moulton, which was very close to the barn, was in danger of catching. Chief Needham and several firemen soon arrived on the scene with a chemical and immediately had the blaze under control. A horse shed, owned by H. D. Monlton, which stood close to the barn, was also burned to the grounds. The harn was a new one, having been built in 1909, at a cost of $500. There were several tons of hay in the structure owned by Mr. Moulton. This together with the loss of the horse shed makes his loss abont $250. The total loss was about $750. The harn was insured for $300. The canse of the fire is nnknown.

A Matron's Confession

She Tells How She Gave Up Her Doll For a Lover

By EVELYN D. WILCOX

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Father has never done a day's work in his life. I have often heard him say that to go to a store or an office every day and attend to details such as buying and selling and shipping and financiering and such matters that have no importance except for the time being, dying as fast as they are born, like certain insects, would soon wear him out. But to sit in a library and read immortal works such as the Greek poets and the Latin prose writers—father reads them in the original Greek and Latin—that is a way of spending one's time fitted not for commercial slaves, but intellectual gentlemen.

When I was a child we lived—my parents live there yet—in the country not far from a great city. Father had inherited some property from his ancestors that had been handed down through several generations, and our income, though small, was sufficient for our wants. So father was at liberty to spend his time in a way that he considered profitable. I sometimes overheard people sneering at him for living the life of a drone, as they expressed it, but since I have grown old it seems to me that even the real drones in a colony of bees must have their place in nature's workshop or they would not be there.

Another singular thing about Dame Nature is that, while she requires years to transform a boy into a man, she will turn a girl into a woman in a twinkling. At any rate it was so with me. When I was thirteen I was sitting one morning on the porch at home, my doll being in a chair beside me. Seeing a young fellow—he appeared to be about seventeen—come into the grounds, I seized the combination of chiua, cottou and sawdust and flung it in an open window behind me. There were some books on a table near by, and, taking up one of them, pulling down the short skirt of my dress at the same time so that it would cover my knees, I pretended to read.

The young fellow came along by the winding walk under the great trees—they had recently put forth that season's leaves—and approached the porch. Though my gaze was bent on my book, I saw not the printed words, but the advancing youth. I have a miniature portrait made of him at that time, and many who have seen it have taken it for an ideal creation. He was tall for his years, and his beautifully shaped head was set on as beautiful a neck, his collar being of the open sort, which showed the throat to advantage. His face was a perfect oval, his eyes large and lustrous, his hair falling about his temples in disordered waves.

I have spoken from experience in saying that Dame Nature will turn a girl into a woman in a twinkling. My own transformation did not occupy more than a minute. Within that period I caught sight of the youth, flung away my doll and was in love.

The newcomer paid no more attention to me than if I had been made, like my doll, of sawdust. I was stung to the quick that he did not look at me. He rang the bell, asked for father and was shown into the house. I went upstairs and, stationing myself beside a window overlooking the walk by which he must pass out of the place, waited for him to do so. When he departed I was watching him from behind curtains. He walked with a satisfied step, as though he had come for a purpose and had accomplished it.

I wished to go right down to the library and learn all about the visitor from father, but I feared to show an undue interest in him. I tried hard to wait a long while, but five minutes was all my impatience would allow. Going into the library, I pretended to hunt for a book, at the same time asking as if incidentally:

"Who was your visitor, papa?"

"Julian Trowbridge."

"What did he come for?"

To ask me to coach him for his college examination. He has applied for admission in June."

"Are you going to coach him?"

"Yes. I couldn't very well refuse. He's the son of my old friend Trowbridge, who was in college with me. Trowbridge has devoted himself to ignoble pursuits and got rich. I pulled him through his graduating examinations."

"Oh, my goodness gracious!" I said to myself, putting my hand to my heart to still its wild beating. Then I asked, "Is he coming here for instruction?"

"Yes, every morning at 11."

And so I should see this young god whom I had suddenly set up in my heart every day till June. If father had known the tumult within me he doubtless would have ordered me to the nursery every morning before his pupil's coming. Father had published a translation of Ovid's "Art of Love" with copious notes, but he did not know enough about love itself to suspect that his own daughter had already been pierced by one of Cupid's arrows. The natural he studied in his library from the ancients; the artificial came to him the moment he left it. His daughter must go to college, and that meant absence of love for seven or eight years to come. That he had right under his own nose but a repetition of what had occurred ever since human beings were born into the world was furthest from his thoughts.

In nature the first step in mating is to build a nest. In my case there was a lot of preliminary work to do. My first great object to accomplish was to induce my mother to procure some dresses that would reach at least to my ankles. After much trouble I persuaded her to engage a dressmaker to come to the house and make me some summer costumes. By day mother would give her instructions as to the length of my skirts and by night I would surreptitiously lower them while they were merely basted. When they were finished mother would scold the poor woman for not obeying her orders.

"How is your pupil getting on papa?" I asked one day.

"Not at all. He's stupid as an owl. He can't even conjugate the present teuse of the verb "to love."

"Not this year."

Father was not looking at me, so I was at liberty to raise my eyes to heaven with a mute thanks and resolved that if the coaching should continue for another year in case the instructor could not teach the pupil how to conjugate the verb "to love" I would do so myself.

For a year Julian Trowbridge came and went for his lessons, taking no notice of me whatever. The next spring I asked father if he thought his pupil would be able to enter college that year.

"Possibly," he replied, "by hard boning, but he has no taste for the classics. I don't see why his father wishes to send him to a university."

"Has he learned to conjugate the verb 'to love?'" I asked.

Father gave me a quick glance. I had changed a good deal within the year and might now have passed for a young lady. But he saw no consciousness of a double meaning in my demeanor and replied;

"Oh, he's got beyond that, of course, but he couldn't yet pass an examination on Cæsar's Commentaries."

"He must be very backward," I remarked carelessly, and as I left the room father called to me, "You're far ahead of him."

This gave me an idea. I had met the "blockhead" many times, and he was beginning to trent me with more consideration. One day I said to him: "I think father is too impatient with you. If you'll let me read Latin with you I'm sure we'll be a help to each other."

He accepted my offer, and I told father that he might spend the time he was devoting to Julian in his library, turning his pupil over to me. Father was very glad to get rid of him, and the very next day Julian and I were seated on a rustic bench under a tree with a copy of Virgil between us.

I have boys of my own now, and I surely would not consent to have one of them fall under such an influence as Julian Trowbridge experienced at that time. I had no more intention of teaching him the dead languages than I had of teaching him to fly in the air. Fortunately for him, however, I had inherited my father's ability to learn and to teach them. My object was to teach him to conjugate the verb "to love"—"I love, thou lovest, he or she loves, we love, you love, they love." In short, in my code of instruction every one loved, and that's all they did. But since Julian's mind was bent especially upon getting into college and he found in me a more seductive teacher than my father the lesson resulted more to his erudition than might have been supposed. I didn't care how much Latin he learned provided he didn't fail to master the verb "to love." Girls between, say, twelve and sixteen are usually far more capable of learning than boys. This gave me an advantage. I taught Julian Latin and at the same time deftly wove in that other instruction which was far nearer my heart. I prepared him to enter college and to be my future husband at the same time. In learning the first he was not as stupid as my father considered him; as to the other I confess I had a very hard time with him. He would conjugate the verb "to love," saying "I love" with no feeling whatever. One day while he was doing so in this perfunctory way I sat very near him—so near, indeed, that a few loose strands of my hair brushed against his cheek. Suddenly there came a fervor into his voice that I had vainly expected for weeks. Then I felt an arm stealing around my waist, and I knew that my pupil was prepared both for college and to be my lover.

He passed his entrance examination without a condition and gave me all the credit for enabling him to do so.

"But you do father an injustice," I remonstrated. "You must admit"—

"What! That old bookworm? He may know a lot, but he has no ability whatever to impart knowledge to any one else. Why, do you know, he spent months trying to teach me to conjugate the verb 'to love' without my being able to catch even the mood. As for 'I am loved,' I didn't know anything about it."

I laughed and remarked that I was the only one of the three who at that time knew all about that mood.

I have said that, having boys of my own, I would not like to have them fall under the same influence that their father fell under at eighteen This needs to be qualified. It depends on the girl. If any of my sons should at that age fall in love with a girl who would have in her the traits to hold his affection when he has grown older and to make him a valuable life help meet I should be very glad to have him do so. I believe that early mating is not only natural, but beneficial, provided the persons mating are fitted for a life partnership.

Reign of the Dandies.

In the matter of dress we have fallen upon a decline since the days when the Duke of Wellington was refused admission to Almack's because he was wearing trousers instead of breeches and silk stockings. Even Almack's, however, had to admit trousers within its closely guarded portals the following year. When Gladstone was "up" at Oxford the reign of the dandies was in full swing. When late in life he revisited the university to lecture to the undergraduates on Homer he was asked by G. W. E. Russell whether he noticed any difference between his audience and the men of his own time.

"Yes," he replied, "in their dress an enormous change. I am told that I had among my audience some of the most highly connected and richest men in the university, and there wasn't one whom I couldn't have dressed from top to toe for £5."—St. James' Gazette.

A "Fast" Train.

"Speaking of railroads," said the truthful man, "the ultimate word, in my experience, was a certain 'limited' on which I traveled last summer. At a point where we were making our greatest speed a man stood at the side of the track with a moving picture machine. I leaned out of the window and called to him, 'How are you getting on?'

"He stopped turning the crank and spoke with an expression of deep disgust.

"'It don't seem to be no use,' he said. 'Hold your head still, please. I want to get a time exposure.'"—Everybody's.

Not So Brave.

"He was certainly brave to crawl under the bed and engage in a life and death struggle with that burglar.'

"When he crawled under the bed he thought the burglar was in the basement."—Houston Post.

HAPPY RESULTS.

Have Made Many Palmer Residents Enthusiastic.

No wonder scores of Palmer citizens grow enthusiastic. It is enough to make anyone happy to find relief after years of suffering. Public statements like the following are but truthful representations of the daily work done in Palmer by Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. J. M. Barton, 307 South Main St., Palmer Mass., says: "My faith in Doan's Kidney Pills is just as strong to-day as it was when I publicly recommended them in 1898. For a long time I was troubled a great deal by severe pains through my loins when going up or down stairs. If I sat in one position for any length of time or did any extra work, my suffering was acute. I finally began using Doan's Kidney Pills and received great relief from the first. I continued taking them and it was not long before all the symptoms of kidney trouble had disappeared."

Marshal Tureen and His Soup.

There is a quaint old shop in London which still bears the name of Samuel Birch, the first purveyor of turtle soup in the English capital. Amid all the changes of the city Birch's shop in Cornhill survives in the guise it wore when its owner was lord mayor of London in the memorable year of Waterloo. Samuel Birch achieved distinction in many fields. He was an orator and a patriot; he was colonel of the city militia and accepted with great good nature his nickname of Marshal Tureen; he was a man of letters, produced plays that held the stage and books that were readable, though now seldom read. One of his plays, "The Adopted Child," was popular long after its author had killed his last turtle. His daughter married Lamartine, and one of his sons, a fine classical scholar, begat a family of scholars. Yet Birch's claim to fame rests most upon the fact that he was the man who made turtle soup popular. City merchants, templars from the inns and dandies from the west end all flocked to Cornhill, the turtle house of all London.—Argonaut.

Many Places Named For Washington

By ROBERT DONNELL.

Did it ever occur to you that the surname of George Washington is permanently attached to more places in the United States than that of any other man? In fact, no name in human history plays so great a part in geographical nomenclature. Were it possible to blot out all historical record of Washington his name would survive to the end of time in the places which bear it.

One state in the Union is named for Washington.

The capital of the United States is named for Washington.

Towns in thirty-three of the forty-six states are named for Washington.

Several states have more than one town or village named Washington, the entire list numbering fifty-eight.

Nearly every city of consequence and many smaller towns have Washington streets or avenues, Washington parks, Washington squares or other localities named for the Father of His Country.

The states having Washington counties are Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia and Wisconsin.

The states having cities, towns or villages named for Washington are Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

In the city of New York is Washington square, a little park of historic and artistic memories, where on the one hundredth anniversary of Washington's accession to the presidency was dedicated the magnificent Washington arch, the gateway to Fifth avenue.

As new states are created new Washington counties and towns follow. In short, the people of the United States have the Washington habit.

And who was it said that republics are ungrateful?

SMALL DUTIES.

True, we can never be at peace till we have performed the highest duty of all, till we have arisen and gone to our Father, but the performance of smaller duties—yes, even of the smallest—will do more to give us temporary repose, will act more as healthful anodynes, than the greatest joys that can come to us from any other quarter.—G. Macdonald.

GEORGE WASHINGTON was a great man. But history does not give him full credit for his greatness He was much greater than most of us suspect So far as I know, George Washington was the only man in history who conquered a powerful nation while he was asleep Napoleon Bonaparte was a great soldier, and his biographers tell us that he slept only five hours a day Yet on that five hours' sleep he conquered Europe, and if he had got up a little earlier in the morning he might not have fallen down at Waterloo

But George Washington went to the other extreme. He slept all the time

IN NEW LONDON THEY SHOWED ME—

He slept twenty-four hours a day. He never did anything but sleep. He never woke up. And yet he whipped the British to a stand and deliver point.

It is true that it took him seven or eight years to do it, but even that was a most prodigious feat for a sleepwalker. If he could do that well as a somnambulist, just think what he might have done had he been gifted with chronic insomnia!

The first town I visited in search of sights in one of the thirteen original packages of our government was in New Jersey—Morristown, I believe it was—and I asked the depot agent if there were any historical relics in town. His face lighted up like the business side of a dark lantern in edition de luxe, and he replied, with warm enthusiasm and great town pride:

"Yes, indeed. There's the house where George Washington slept. Come right along and I'll show it to you."

I saw the man was anxious lest somebody else should be the first to show me the house where George Washington slept, and so I went along with him and saw the house where George Washington slept.

Not long after that I went down to Freehold, the town where the battle of Monmouth was fought and where Molly Pitcher fought her only pitched battle, and the first place they showed me was the house where George Washington slept.

Later I visited Trenton, where Washington crossed the Delaware—in his sleep—and I crossed the Delaware on a bridge and saw the house where George Washington slept.

I began to think that the entire state of New Jersey must have been George Washington's bedroom. I wondered if George hung his nightshirt on Sandy Hook and did all of his sleeping in New Jersey; if he always walked into that state at bedtime—in his sleep—and went to bed. It looked that way.

But I soon found out that George had a large number of state bedrooms. New Jersey was only one of an elaborate suit of Washingtonian bedchambers, each of which was as big as all outdoors.

I had occasion to go to New London, Conn., and the first house I saw there was the house where George Washington slept They took me in and showed me George's bedroom. They hadn't made up the bed since George Washington slept in it.

I ran over to Hartford to look for the charter oak and ran up against the house where George Washington slept.

Down at New Haven I saw the house where George Washington slept.

At Waterbury, where they make the watches and watch the makers, I saw the house where George Washington slept, and they told me that he used a Waterbury watch for an alarm clock. Its ticks were so loud that the bedtick said it was no use for it to wear striped clothes.

I crossed over into Rhode Island and stopped at Providence, where the prond natives showed me the house where George Washington slept. I told them that his sleeping there must have been an act of providence. They made me leave town after that, and I went up to Newport and saw the house where George Washington slept.

Rhode Island is not much of a state for size. It's close to Plymouth rock, but it isn't any bigger than a banty hen in the shell compared to other states, and so it didn't take George very long to sleep all over that state, and after being shown the house where George Washington slept in two or three other Rhode Island towns I made a trip to Springfield, Mass., which is named after the Springfield rifle, and saw the house where George Washington slept.

In Cambridge I wanted to see the Washington elm, under which Washington took command of the army, but they showed me the house where George Washington slept.

Then I went out to Concord to see the home of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"COME ALONG, AND I'LL SHOW IT TO YOU."

and they showed me the house where George Washington slept.

After that I made a trip to Lexington, where—

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
Here once the embattled farmers stood

I wanted to see that rude bridge that arched the flood, but they took me across the bridge without telling me what bridge it was and showed me the house where George Washington slept.

By that time I was beginning to get a little sleepy and tired myself, so I concluded to go up into the Green Mountain country of Vermont and let the mountain air wake me up. For self protection I pinned a large placard on my back reading:

Yes, I'm From Missouri, but DON'T Show Me—

But I stopped at Bennington, the town where General John Stark remarked that if he didn't whip the British before 7 p. m. Mary Stark would collect his life insurance, and they showed me—the house where George Washington slept.

I got out of Vermont as fast as I could and went to Portsmouth, N. H., to see if the port could keep its mouth shut about George Washington, but they up and told me that if I didn't get out of town on the next train they would show me the house where George Washington slept.

I got out and went straight back to New York city without asking for any stop over privileges, and that night I slept, and the next morning I met a friend of mine who had lately removed to New York from Pike county, Mo., and was still seeing the sights. He invited me to go up into the Harlem neighborhood with him and see some sights, and I went, and he showed me the house where George Washington slept. He told me I was from Missouri and he had to show me.

After I got ont of the hospital I received a letter from a friend of mine who lives at Valley Forge, Pa. He said I needed country air and the rural sights and scenes and invited me to come down and spend a month with him and recuperate. I was about to accept this kind invitation, but upon reflection I remembered that George Washington used to live at Valley Forge, and I knew that if I went out there I would see the house where George Washington slept. So I wrote my friend that I had died the week before of Washington on the brain and was buried under the house where George Washington slept, and I stayed in New York.

Nobody has ever shown me a house where George Washington woke up, or where he ate breakfast, or smoked a cigarette, or used the telephone, or hacked the cherry furniture with his little tommy hack, or fought the British.

And that is why I say, All honor to George Washington! Though he slept every where and all the time and never woke up, except that time they put the Waterbury watch in his bedroom, he still found time to become the father of his country. He was first in war first in sleep and first in the hearts of his countrymen! After life's fitful fever he sleeps well as usual Long may he sleep! And long may his grateful countrymen hold in reverence and keep the taxes paid and the roof on and the mortgage off

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Scottville, Mich.—"I want to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done me. I live on a farm and have worked very hard. I am forty-five years old, and am the mother of thirteen children. Many people think it strange that I am not broken down with hard work and the care of my family, but I tell them of my good friend, your Vegetable Compound, and that there will be no backache and bearing down pains for them if they will take it as I have. I am scarcely ever without it in the house.

"I will say also that I think there is no better medicine to be found for young girls to build them up and make them strong and well. My eldest daughter has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for painful periods and irregularity, and it has always helped her.

"I am always ready and willing to speak a good word for the Lydia E. Pinkham's Remedies. I tell every one I meet that I owe my health and happiness to these wonderful medicines." —Mrs. J. G. JOHNSON, Scottville, Mich., R.F.D. 3.

LITTLE FIRE SATURDAY.

FIREMEN KEEP IT IN THE BUILDING.

And Little Damage Done. Stock Burned And Smoked. Cause of Fire Unknown.

An alarm was rung in from box 68 about 11 45 Saturday night for a blaze in the old bakery building on Church street, which is now occupied as a salesroom for women's furnishings and notions. The business is owned by Louis Tallant, with Samuel Green as manager.

Green had left the store and gone to Springfield on the 11.15 car. The fire was seen by two young men on their way home, who gave the alarm. The firemen broke in the windows and door and found the interior of the store filled with flames. The glaze was quickly extinguished with a loss to the building estimated at not more than $100. The cause of the fire is unknown.

BRIMFIELD.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Hitchcock and Miss Lydia B. Hitchcock were present at the observation of the 80th birthday of Mr. Hitchcock's cousin, Benjamin D Allen at Wellesley last week Thursday. Mr Allen was for many years an organist and a leading musician in Worcester, and now makes his home with his daughter, who is the wife of Rev. W. W. Sleeper of Wellesley.

The cantata "Ruth" was given by pupils of the Academy last Friday night in the town hall and was a concert of more than ordinary merit for a school performance and reflected much credit upon the training that has been given by Principal Kanney and the work in music in the Academy under his instruction. The cantata was given by a chorus of 50 voices, assisted by Charles E Hitchcock of Worcester.

There has been a good sale of tickets for "Pinafore," which is to be presented in the opera house this evening by the choir of Trinity church of Ware.

COST OF OUTDOOR POOR.

Palmer Paid 55 Cents Per Capita Last Year.

AVERAGE OF 45 CENTS FOR 10 YEARS.

Comparison With Other Places. Overseers Have Had Unusual Conditions Recently.

A citizen interested in town matters has called the attention of the Journal to a table recently compiled by a statistitian in Rochester, N. Y., showing the amount per capita which some of the larger cities of the country expend yearly in relief of families—in other words for "outdoor poor." Beginning with New York, Philadelphia and St. Louis, which pay nothing, the sums increase from .012 in Louisville, Ky., to, 057 in Hartford and 156 in Springfield. This is for aid given out of public funds and does not include organized private charities. He suggested that the amount paid in the town of Palmer be figured, and this has been done showing the following figures for the past ten years, based on the census reports of population, allowing for each year the proportionate increase of the entire period.

Year.	Amount.	Average.
1903	4154.48	.514
1904	4683 69	.576
1905	3779.73	.459
1906	2847.29	.342
1907	2875.92	.342
1908	2598.51	.295
1909	3391 53	.395
1910	3395 30	.394
1911	4792.90	.556
Average for 10 years,		.453

This shows that during the last ten years the town of Palmer has paid each year an average of over 45 cents per person as the population is given in the census

The overseers announce that they have had unusual calls from outdoor poor the past year; the total number of persons aided have been 193, against 104 last year. Of these the proportion is about 77 adults and 116 children. Peculiar conditions have arisen which are responsible for this increase, which the overseers say they see no indication of lessening during the coming year.

Doings of the Legislature.

The Governor's Reception Wednesday—Congressional Redistricting—First Win By Radicals—Gubernatorial Matters—Drinking Cups on Railroads—Deer Legislation—Bar and Bottle Bill.

BOSTON, Feb 22, 1911.

Gov Foss's official reception on the birthday of the Founder of His Country was attended by 4383 persons, by the official count, against 4761 for Gov. Draper last year and 5505 two years ago. Critics of the governor emphasize the difference. One remarks that the shortage is due to the absence of Mayor Fitzgerald, so that the word was not passed around. Another suggestion is that the governor did not have the benefit of the extensive newspaper advertising which Gov. Draper had last year. Perhaps the difference will become a campaign issue, if it is figured out in percentages. This difference indicates that the next campaign has not been settled yet. Taking the reception as a whole, it was much like its predecessors, with the difference that there was more display than ever of military, historic, patriotic and social organizations. The Boston central labor union was also represented and a leading labor man says that every central union in the state would have sent a delegation, if asked. There was a noticeable absence of members of the Legislature. Those who live in this part of the state went home last night. Western Massachusetts was fairly well represented, but the members who live near enough to the state house did not take the trouble to pay their respects. Heads of departments were less to be seen than usual, and none of the judges were noticed. There was plenty of military music by Stone's band. Adj. Gen. Pearson stood by Gov Foss and was a striking soldierly figure with his six feet of height and bright epaulets. The public did not have any right of way, owing to the unprecedented number of organizations. These were scheduled for every five minutes during the two hours and a half of the reception, so that the miscellaneous public came in between these detachments. Gov. Foss gave a cheery handshake to every person, except a few who were looking the other way and did not see him, while Mrs. Foss was obliged to rest her hand at times. There was a noticeable absence of politicians of any sort, whether Democratic or Republican.

In the Legislature Republican politics are of more consequence just now than Democratic. The next great matter to come up will be the congressional redistricting bill, and the question is how the committee shall be made up to carve the state into the 16 districts which will be provided under the bill to be passed by Congress. In the nature of the case, with the Republican preponderance, it would be natural for them to have a majority of the committee. But Speaker Walker is quoted as disposed to give the Democrats half of a committee of 14 in the House. Thus he would stand as strictly impartial, though the Democrats have only 112 to 127 Republicans. But the complication comes from President Treadway, who is rumored to be considering whether he will not meet Walker's move by making the Senate end of the committee a tie between parties, though the division is 26 to 14 The common sense way would be to divide as nearly as possible according to numerical strength in the respective branches. Then the Democrats would have more than they ever had before, by a material number.

On the first matter bearing on the radical tendency of the Legislature, the radical element has won its first point. The judiciary committee is almost evenly divided over the bill for trial by jury in cases of contempt of court, but the majority is for the bill. The conservative element in both branches is against it, and the men for it are mostly the new and less known members of the House. Still, it is a material gain for the labor men to get any bill whatever from the committee and they will gain courage from the fact. This is a struggle of years In the nature of the case, as previous Legislatures have been constituted, the Legislature has been against them. It is a novelty to have a majority of the judiciary with them. The fact that there is a Democratic governor at the south end of the state house, who may sign the bill, is an encouragement to the radicals to push for success, while that possibility will doubtless stir up the conservatives all over the state to defeat what they must regard as pernicious legislation. Thus far the Legislature and the governor have got along well together, and the same is true of the governor and council, according to the testimony of one of the seven Republican councilors. If the seven were disposed, they could make trouble for him. But they are not disposed. Gov. Foss works the council hard, but there is no friction, so it is said by one of the seven, and that makes the situation all the more encouraging. In the contest between the House and Senate regarding the powers of investigation to be given to the governor, a complete victory was won by the House, which represented the governor. This was easily possible because of the attitude of Speaker Walker, who insisted that the governor ought to have what he wanted in order to carry out the Walker act of last year, and have the initiative in ordering investigations.

Speaker Walker is not going to have smooth sailing in his contest for governor. One of the leading Democrats in the House gives the speaker high praise because he did not permit himself to be elected United States senator in Lodge's place, as he could presumably have been if he had said the word. Walker believed that he could. Friends who were in touch with the situation in the House believed that he could, and his magnanimity in standing strictly by what he considered the only honorable course for him to take impressed this Democrat deeply. It is said that Representative White of Brookline has carried his canvass for the governorship as far as Worcester and that he has received 8000 favorable replies. Such a total seems incredible and the cautious will not accept it until it has been made plain. White is quoted as using highly disrespectful language about Walker, and it is as certain as need be that White, if he is not candidate for governor after the convention, will be found supporting Frothingham rather than his colleague Walker. White has an opportunity, as chairman of the House committee on ways and means, to keep before the House during most of the session in the practical matter of finance, and he has also an unexampled opportunity to make a record on the difficult subject of state expenditures. He can interfere with the governor much, if so disposed.

Yesterday's almost unanimous vote in the House for the bill to compel railroad companies to furnish every passenger car in use with water and individual drinking cups free was another indication of the radical nature of the body. Messrs. Fosristall of Lynn and Scully of Springfield, both Democrats, opposed the bill on the ground of the expense to the railroads, but they had no following in the House to speak of. It seemed to be popular in the debate for speakers to advertise themselves as not under railroad influence. What the conservative Senate will do remains to be seen. But the House, while yet much undeveloped, shows radicalism up to the full expectation. Speaker Walker's support of direct nominations gives an official countenance to the radical tendency of the body.

It looks as if the deer would not get any favors from the present Legislature. The influence of the State Board of Agriculture is against them, in spite of the speech which President Treadway delivered in their behalf before the committee on fisheries and game. The farmers feel that the deer are too expensive a luxury. The fish and game commission say that the annual increase has not yet been taken, and something must be done to prevent deer from ravaging the farms. So the annual slaughter is likely to go on.

If the battle over the bar and bottle bill is still in progress, as presumably it is, it must be well under cover, for little is heard of it in the state house. Nothing has occurred yet to show the attitude of the members on the temperance issue.

The proposed appropriation of $1,000,000 for "Tech" will raise a storm. Both sides have strong arguments LANDON.

Sleighs Collide in Belchertown.

Hunters from Holyoke caused considerable trouble in Belchertown Wednesday morning. The party were in two sleighs and were driving rapidly up Maple street, when they collided with a sleigh occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Thrasher, making kindling wood of Thrasher's sleigh. Mrs. Thrasher was thrown almost under the horses' feet and was hit by the shafts. The fall and consequent shock to her nerves may have serious consequences. The "colliders" were followed by telephone and constables and were forced to settle.

HUNTED WITH FERRET.

Two Springfield Sportsmen Arrested Wednesday.

CAUGHT WITH THE ANIMAL ON THEM.

Deputies Hatch and Shea Make Capture Near Ware. Men Fined $20 Each.

Arthur P. Ward and Elmer A. Fitch of Springfield were arrested in Enfield Wednesday by Deputy Fish and Game Commissioner James P. Hatch of Springfield and Dennis F. Shea of Ware on a charge of hunting with ferrets.

The men left Springfield in the morning by trolley for Indian Orchard, where they boarded the Athol train, which took them to Enfield. Here they hired a team at the Swift River Hotel and drove to the section of the town called Packardville, where they remained until the middle of the afternoon.

Deputy Hatch followed the men from Springfield and was joined by Shea at Bondsville. They waited in Enfield for the two men to return and arrested them when they brought back the team Both emphatically denied having a ferret in their possession, but Deputy Shea found one in a little bag carried under the left arm of Fitch. The two men had two hounds and had captured three rabbits, and each carried a gun. They appeared in the district court in Ware yesterday morning. They pleaded not guilty to the complaints against them, but did not succeed in convincing Judge H. C. Davis as to their innocence. He found both men guilty and imposed fines of $20 on each, half of which was paid, and the cases were continued a month for payment of the balance. Neither man can hunt any game protected by law for the next 12 months.

WARE.

House Destroyed By Fire.

The fire department was called out Tuesday evening about 7.30 for a blaze in the home of John Harrison on the Gilbertville road about a mile from the village. Mr. Harrison, who lives alone, was in town at the time the fire was discovered, and it had gained great headway before the firemen had arrived. The house could not be saved and efforts were directed to saving the barn in the rear. Because of the scarcity of water in that vicinity the firemen were forced to pump water from a brook nearby. The house and its contents, consisting of a few articles of furniture, were completely destroyed Mr. Harrison places his loss at $3500 He has $1000 insurance. He says he has no idea how the fire could have started. He stays only during the daytime in the house, sleeping in the village. He thinks probably that tramps forced their way in and accidentally set it on fire.

PALMER NEWS.

Death of Alonzo N. Dewey.

Body Brought to Palmer Saturday For Interment in the Family Lot.

The body of Alonzo N. Dewey, 25, was brought to Palmer Saturday from Springfield for burial in the Dewey lot in the Oak Knoll cemetery on Thorndike street. Mr. Dewey died Thursday of last week in the German Lutheran hospital in Philadelphia, Pa., where he went about two weeks ago for an operation. He had been suffering for more than a year with attacks of appendicitis, and had been operated on several times.

Mr. Dewey's home was in Springfield, where he was born November 17, 1886, the son of William C. Dewey, formerly of Palmer, and Ella Flynt Dewey of Monson. He prepared for college at the Springfield high school and at Phillips' Academy at Andover. He was graduated from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University with the class of 1909. In college he was a member of the Book and Snake Society, on the editorial board of the Yale Daily News, and took an active part in athletics and other undergraduate activities. After leaving college he went into business in the West. In the fall of 1909, while at Juneau, Alaska, he was taken ill, and, after several weeks in the hospital of that city, returned to his home in Springfield. Though occasionally well enough to be up and out of doors, he never regained his strength. During most of the time he was unable to leave his room, and for the past few months he had to remain in a hospital, first in Boston, then in Springfield, and finally in Philadelphia, Pa.

The Springfield Republican said of him: It was a privilege to know Alonzo Dewey before his illness. It was a still greater privilege to know him during his brave fight for health. Last spring—when, for a time, he was slightly stronger—he characteristically offered his services as a volunteer teacher in the American International college. Until growing weakness forced him to remain at home he continued to give several hours a day to helping the students in their work. There was always an atmosphere of cheeriness and pleasant humor in his room at home and at the hospital. No one was ever dispirited at the sight of his suffering. "I can never be impatient again," was the reply of one of his nurses. He seemed to be always playing the game with "courage and gayety."

Suggestions For Town Officers.

They Are Mighty Few, Although the Lists Close the Last of Next Week.

With only eight days to the closing of the caucus lists for nominations for town officers, the situation, so far as anything can be learned, remains about the same as a week ago—nothing doing.

So far as candidates for selectmen are concerned, no mention of names has been heard. And the same is true of license commissioners other than the present incumbents. For town treasurer there is only one avowed candidate, George E Clough, W. E. McDonald, who was prominently named last week having declined the honor. For overseer of the poor to succeed A. A. Warriner, who declines to serve longer, the names of L E. Chandler and F. J. Hamilton are heard There are a growing number of citizens who are soggesting the name of John K. Monlton of Palmer for a place on the school committee. Mr. Moulton is a drug clerk in the employ of Lynde & Gonld; he has children in the schools and has served several years on the school committee of Dalton, where he is credited with doing work of an exceptional nature, his friends say. He is much interested in school matters and has given much time to the study of this department of town affairs.

This completes the list of "mentioned" names up to date. The town committees will meet next Saturday evening to prepare the caucus ballots, and there will of course be no lack of material on which to work, although apparently no one but those most interested have any idea now who they will be.

E. at 6 15, evening praise service at 7, followed by the second sermon in the series on "Jesus in relation to the classes;" subject, "Jesus and the flippant woman." All are invited.

A social was held in the parsonage of the Congregational church Tuesday evening. There was a large attendance, and those present were entertained with an interesting talk by Mrs. Brewer on her trip to England two years ago, illustrated with many views taken by her, the reflectroscope being used.

Rev. Luther R. Robinson of Chattanooga, Tenn., will lectnre in the Universalist church Monday evening at 7.30. It is hoped that Mr. Robinson will have a large hearing. He is a pleasing speaker, possessing an attractive personality and his address will appeal to every person interested in the Universalist church.

The snbject of the morning sermon at the Congregational church next Sunday will be "The Master's conception of Christian work;" Sunday school at 12; Y. P S. C. E. at 6 15; evening service at 7, when the paster will begin a series of Lenten sermons on "The making of an all-around man," with "Christian manliness" for the evening theme.

The auditors began work on the accounts of the several town officers yesterday, and expect to finish in a few days. The town report will be printed at the Journal office, and it is the intention of the selectmen to have it ready for distribution somewhat earlier than usual, though this will depend on the time the copy of the various boards is ready.

Mrs. C. B. Fiske of this place returned last Saturday evening from Muncie, Ind., where she went last November on a business trip. Yesterday forenoon she received a telegram from there announcing the death of her son that morning from a stroke of paralysis the evening before. He had a stroke in May, 1909, from which he practically recovered in a short time, but another followed just before Christmas, and he never got out again, though getting around the house on crutches. He leaves a widow and two boys. Mrs Fiske's other son died in December, 1907.

A meeting of the Republican town committee was held in the office of Ernest E. Hobson Saturday evening. E. W. Carpenter was chosen chairman; E. E. Hobson, secretary; Samuel Stewart, treasurer. It was voted to use the Australian ballot at the caucus. The names of candidates for office are to be put on the ballot only by petition with five signers, and the political affiliation of the candidates will not be considered. The petitions must be in the hands of some member of the committee by the evening of March 4, when the committee will hold its next meeting.

The Woman's Relief corps was given the expected large attendance at its chicken-pie supper Wednesday evening, and satisfied its patrons with the excellence of the menu and service, as it always does. The entertainment after the supper was much enjoyed, and dancing followed. It was unfortunate that some of the late comers had to be refused admission, but that was no fault of the corps; the public statutes limit the attendance of buildings according to their capacity, and more wished to attend Wednesday evening than the fixed capacity of the hall; hence the overflow had to be turned away.

The village improvement committee of the Palmer business and social club held a meeting Saturday evening and organized with D L Bodfish as chairman and Horace R. Paine secretary. The following sub committees were appointed: Streets and sidewalks, L E. Chandler, chairman, W. E. McDonald, James Summers, George Ezekiel, H W. Holbrook; health, Dr. J. P. Schneider, chairman, Alfred Swann, W. F. Fillmore, J. A. Hawkes, C. W. Chamberlain; law and order, Rulus Flynt, chairman, C. K. Stone, E. W. Carpenter, J. C. Sullivan, Dr. H. C. Cheney. The Great Mr. Ord

He Turns Amateur Detective

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Henry Ord lighted another cigar and waited impatiently for the reappearance of his chief clerk. Every three minutes he consulted his watch and compared it with the electric timepiece on the wall between the windows. He had an important engagement at 11 o'clock, and it was now 10:30. Smithers was getting more stupid every day.

He brought his feet down from the desk with a thump as the secretary returned with a worried expression on his long, pale face. Mr. Ord reached for his hat and held out his hand.

"Give me the securities, Smithers," he said.

"I can't find them, Mr. Ord," said the clerk diffidently. "I thought perhaps you might have them in here."

"Here!" snorted Mr. Ord impatiently. "If I had them in here why did I send you to the vaults after them?"

"I have looked everywhere, sir. They are not in the vaults nor any other place in the office. I will question"—

"No need to question anybody," cut in Mr. Ord, sinking back in his chair and tossing his hat into the ticker basket. "I gave you those securities day before yesterday, with instructions to lock them in my private box in the vaults. You returned the key to me then, and I have just handed it to you now. I haven't had occasion to go to the box since Thursday. Now, where are those securities?"

"I don't know, sir," returned Smithers respectfully.

"Give me the key to the box. Now come with me and show me where you placed them."

Drawers snapped open, papers rustled, and Mr. Ord's boot heels rapped out on the metal flooring as he went from shelf to shelf, from box to drawer and from drawer to cupboard.

Once more he opened his own private box and ran over the papers contained therein.

"Where the dickens are they?" he demanded savagely when his last efforts proved in vain.

"I really don't know, sir," replied Smithers. "As I said before, I thought it possible that you might have taken them out, and it slipped your mind that you had done so."

"Huh! Perhaps you took them out yourself and it slipped your mind, eh? Ever forget anything, Smithers?"

"Not very often, sir."

Smithers faithfully followed his employer back to the private office and folded his long thin arms, behlud his back preparatory to listening to the lecture that he knew Mr. Ord had in store. And this time—well, those L. D. bonds were worth $10.000 today, and it was known that tomorrow they might not be worth the paper they were written on because—but that has nothing to do with this story.

"Please call up Hughes & Carraway, and tell Mr. Hughes I shall be unable to keep that engagement with him. I will talk with him later on the phone. Now, Smithers, this is the third time this has happened—securities have disappeared in this same way during several days until the market interest in them has abated. It's an old gag and won't work again. Now, who do you think is at the bottom of this?"

Smithers fidgeted nervously and looked out of the window at the blank wall of another building. "Really, Mr. Ord, I haven't formed an opinion," he said, rather mincingly.

"Haven't, eh? Well, I have," thundered his employer, fixing the chief clerk with a hard stare.

Smithers jumped nervously. "Indeed, sir!" he said.

"Yes, indeed, Mr. Smithers. I'm going to ferret this mystery out before 2 o'clock. See! This office is the worst managed affair in the city of New York, and you are the most inefficient chief clerk I ever employed. Got that?"

"Yes, sir."

"See that row of books on the shelf?" Mr. Ord pointed his ruler at a narrow shelf laden with cloth bound copies of Conan Doyle's books.

Smithers bowed respectfully.

"Detective stories, every one of 'em. I've read 'em all," said Mr. Ord. I shall solve the mystery of the disappearance of those securities by the same methods as those employed by that noted detective," went on Mr. Ord, forgetting in his excitement to compare his watch with the timepiece on the wall. His searching glance fell on an advertising blotter that lay on his desk. It had become mixed in his personal mail, and he had not tossed it in the waste paper basket until now. He threw it in and crossed his hands on his plump waistcoat.

"Do you wear plasters, Mr. Smithers?" he asked coolly.

The chief clerk stared at this personal question, fired so abruptly from the lips of the great Mr. Ord—great in the financial district.

"Sometimes," he said guardedly.

"Have you one on now?" snapped Mr. Ord.

"Yes, sir," blushed Smithers.

Mr. Ord smiled with satisfaction. "Mr. Smithers, sir, you have been with me for three years, and up to this time I have never detected you in a grave error. I have trusted you implicitly, and I have always found you faithful and honest. In fact, I have no fault to find save that the office has no system whatever, and I can never find anything when I want it. Got that?"

"Yes, sir," Smithers replied dazedly.

"Now, sir, you admit you are wearing a plaster. How do I know that those securities are not concealed within your plaster, huh?" Mr. Ord looked from his astonished clerk to the red bound volumes of Sherlock Holmes' adventures and patted his chest knowingly. "How do I know, sir?" he repeated.

"Really, I couldn't say, Mr. Ord," began Smithers, and then, as if the real meaning of his employer's insinuation had pierced some sensitive spot, at last he added forcibly, "But I wouldn't do such a thing, you know, Mr. Ord, begging your pardon."

"You wouldn't, eh? How do you know you wouldn't?"

"I couldn't, sir," protested Smithers warmly. "You see the plaster I'm wearing is a bunion plaster, and I couldn't get the securities"—

Mr. Ord raised a fat forefinger. "I didn't ask you for details regarding your personal ailments, Mr. Smithers," he said icily. There was silence for a few moments while his little eyes roamed from his three foot shelf of wisdom to Smithers' now agitated countenance. He pulled the ticker tape toward him and studied the figures as they slipped through his fingers. He had made rather a fool of himself and the L. D. bonds were as far from discovery as ever. Once more he turned to his clerk.

"Did you mention to anybody that those bonds were in the vault?"

"Not a soul knew of their presence there except yourself and me, sir."

"Did you check over all the other securities in my box?"

"Yes, sir, and every other security in the vault," returned Smithers earnestly. "Begging your pardon, Mr. Ord, you might recollect that in every other instance of loss of papers, they were afterward found to have been mislaid either by Mr. Carson or yourself."

"Enough!" said Ord sternly. "I have no such recollection, young man! Now," pointing an accusing finger in the face of his uncomfortable clerk, he continued with measured accents, "those bonds bore a date stamp impressed with purple ink. How did purple ink come to be on your hands and face, Mr. Smithers?" Mr. Ord shot a glance at his bookshelf and then his eyes came back to the face of his clerk.

For the first time Smithers' face wrinkled into a faint smile. "I was assisting Miss Fenn to adjust a new ribbon in her type machine," he said primly. "Before I had time to remove these stains you called me."

"Is it one of the duties of my chief clerk to assist the stenographers with such duties?" thundered Mr. Ord fiercely. "What do I hire office boys for, eh?"

In Mr. Smithers' opinion office boys were hired to loaf around the corridors and discuss baseball topics. He merely cracked another deprecating smile and did not answer the question.

"Huh! I don't approve of courting in the office, Mr. Smithers," remarked Mr. Ord, his critical eye still on his employee's pink face. He pressed a button beside his desk, and the door opened promptly, admitting a tall, slender girl whose black hair was twisted in the latest fashion and whose bright brown eyes seemed to take in every detail of the situation in one swift penetrating glance. Her gaze swept her employer's desk and then came to attention at Mr. Ord's curt accents.

"Sit down, Miss Fenn."

She did so, flapping open a notebook and poising her pencil.

"I don't wish to dictate. Have you seen or heard anything of the L. D. bonds since they were put in the vaults day before yesterday?"

Miss Fenn nodded. "Why, yes, Mr. Ord. Don't you remember you sent me to the vault for them this morning after you talked with Mr. Hughes over the telephone? You were reading when I came back, and you used the bonds as a bookmark as you closed the book to resume dictating. Why, there they are!" She picked up a red covered book from under his nose and removed several beautifully engraved certificates from between the pages of "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes." There was a sickly smile of enlightenment on Mr. Ord's face.

"Thank you, Miss Fenn; you may go now," he said, with an effort. When the door had closed behind her trim figure Mr. Ord recovered his self possession. He picked his hat out of the basket, placed it on his head, compared his watch with the clock, nodded approval at the hour of 12 and drew the telephone receiver across the desk.

"By the way, Smithers," he said genially without turning his head, "I suppose if you're going to get married you'll need a little more money, eh?"

"I really couldn't say that I'd thought about it, Mr. Ord," said the clerk meekly.

"Well, just tell the cashier to add another hundred to your salary. I'll O. K. it. Don't mention it! Hey! Central! Give me 3369 Livingston. Hello! Hughes & Carraway? Ah, Hughes; about that L. D. Now"—

Smithers closed the door softly behind him and paused in the tiny outer office where Bessie Fenn sat before her machine staring dreamily at a blank sheet of paper on the roller. The young man leaned over until his breath fanned her cheek. "Bessie," he whispered, "he's raised me another hundred. I'm sure I can take care of your mother as well as you. Will you marry me soon?"

Bessie's nimble fingers rapped out three letters and an exclamation point, and then on the fair blank sheet there appeared a word written in purple letters:

"Yes!"

How to Cool Things.

A newlywed named Jones was talking to his friend Casey the other day about the heat in his flat and was asking the other for a little advice.

"Do you know my dining room is the hottest place in the world?" began the newlywed. "Do you know of any way I might cool it off?"

"From experience I should say that a very good way to bring about a change in atmospheric conditions," remarked the older married man, "and one that is sure to bring results one way or the other, is to take a friend home to dinner when your wife isn't expecting company." — Philadelphia Times.

Excluded.

His Love.

"A case of love at first sight, eh?"

"No, second sight. The first time he saw her he didn't know she was an heiress."

How Gold Plate Is Made.

Talking of silver gilt plate, it is often spoken of as gold plate. One hears of the gold service at Windsor castle, of the gold plate owned by sovereigns of Europe and by other persons in this country as well as abroad. As a matter of fact, these so called gold services are silver gilt, and only a few pieces of pure gold are owned by the English crown or any other crown. It may interest our readers to learn how this fine, mercurial or water gilding—for it is known by all of these three names—is done. Pure gold and mercury are mixed into a paste. The silver article to be gilded has been chemically cleaned, is rubbed all over with this paste, which has been placed in a silk bag, just as the blue used in washing is put in a bag. When the piece of plate has been rubbed over it is perfectly white. It is then put into an oven, and gradually the mercury goes off in fumes, leaving on the article a deposit of pure gold, which has practically become one with the piece of silver and will last for centuries.—London Cor. New York Post.

The Spider Cure.

The request for a "nut to put a spider in to cure baby's whooping cough" which recently startled a Somerset shopkeeper recalls the spider "cures" of the past. There was, and indeed is, for instance, that Irish belief in the web as a remedy for cuts, warts and bruises and that superstitition of the eastern counties which credited it with power to cure fevers. The weaver of the web, too, was looked upon as a doctor of medicine.

A note from an ancient Notes and Queries gives the illustration. "One of my parishioners suffering from ague," wrote a Somerset vicar, "was advised to catch a large spider and shut him up in a box. As he pines away the disease is supposed to wear itself out." A similar belief prevailed in the south of Ireland, but there treacle had to be substituted for the box as coffin for the ague healer.—Westminster Gazette

Progressing.

"I think Arthur would have proposed to me last night if you hadn't come in the room just when you did."

"What reason have you for believing that?"

"He had just taken both of my hands in his. He had never held more than one of them at a time before."

MOVE FOR NEW SELECTMEN.

Proposition to Name An Entirely Fresh List of Town Fathers.

The political pot has been started simmering by the announcement that there is a movement on foot to nominate an entirely new list of selectmen for the annual election—three men who have never before held the position. The names mentioned are Robert H. Cushman, Frank R Sutcliffe and Justin G. Carew. There capabilities for the position cannot be questioned, their friends say. It is expected that the present members of the board, as well as some others, will be candidates for the same positions, among them men who have served on the board before, but the originators of the new movement argue that an entirely new board would have no old scores to settle and no political debts to pay off, and would be bound by no traditions or precedents. Whether or not the men talked of will allow their names to be used is not known, but they have been picked out as suitable men to give the town good service. It will be remembered that at the Republican caucus last spring several friends of Mr. Cushman very nearly succeeded in nominating him for this office; his name was not on the ballot, but it was written in by nearly 30 voters and he came within three votes of being nominated. But those who now mention his name say that they had no part in the movement last spring.

Success of Former Monson Men.

The many Monson friends of Daniel J. and James F. Gallivan of Greenville, S. C., former residents of this town, will be glad to know of their success since starting in business for themselves as the Gallivan Construction Company. One of the largest contracts in the South has just been awarded them, the construction of a million-dollar mill for the Westervelt Cotton Mills of Greenville, S. C. The following is taken from a Greenville daily paper:

The fact that the contract for the construction of this large plant has been awarded to a home concern, is a thing all Greenville is proud of. The Gallivan Building Company, composed of Mr. Daniel J Gallivan of No. 16 Pinckney street, secretary, and Mr. James F Gallivan of No 416 Hampton avenue, president and treasurer, has its main offices in the Gallivan building at No. 213 West Washington street. The company does a general constructing business and its reputation for efficiency is unsurpassed by that of any construction company in the whole country. A large number of handsome structures in this city alone attests the scope and ability of this construction firm. Among the buildings in and about Greenville constructed by the Gallivan Building Company are the following: The Monaghan Cotton Mills, the Greer Manufacturing Company, the Acadia Cotton Mills, the James C. Furnman Hall of Science, on Furnam Campus, and the Gallivan building on West Washington street.

The various structures comprising the Westervelt Mills will all be constructed of brick, with steel beams supporting the floors, wooden beams for the roof supports, wooden roofing and floors, the latter to be covered with maple tops. The dimensions of the various buildings are to be as follows: Spinning and carding department 130 x 423 6 feet two stories high; weave shed, 301 4 x 231 feet, one story with saw-tooth roof; picker and slashed department, 47 2 x 114 feet, two stories; boiler-room, 48 8 x 66 4 feet; warehouse, 102 x 154 feet, three compartments.

The Westervelt Mills Company is capitalized at $1,000,000 and will have 50,000 spindles with 1200 looms for the manufacturing of India lawns and linons Mr. J. I. Westervelt is president of the company and Lockwood, Greene & Company of this city and Boston are the architect-engineers in charge.

Good Basketball Game Scheduled.

The Monson basketball team will meet one of the fastest and cleanest playing teams in this section, when they have the Quiet Five of Holyoke for their opponents in Memorial hall next Tuesday evening. They send word that they are going to work hard to defeat the Monson team and if successful will claim the championship of Western Massachusetts. The home team will show their best form and the Holycke team will have to play a much faster game than any of the previous visiting teams, if they get the big end of the score. No Objectors at Railroad Hearing.

The selectmen gave a public hearing last evening to the officials of the Southern New England railroad company on their petition for a layout for their proposed new line from Palmer to Providence, which is to cross through the north part of the town. The company was represented by Assistant Engineer H. C. Estep and A. S Lyon. The location asked for is not the first designated. From their latest surveys they find that to run the proposed line across the farms of William Fay and C. J. Foley it would reduce the cost about $100,000. No objections were made to the petition and the selectmen have taken it under advisal. The selectmen will go over the route with the engineers tomorrow.

The Academy team added another game to the won column Wednesday afternoon, when they easily defeated the Northampton high school team by the score of 33 to 11. The game was fast and exciting and started off with a rush, Maynard, the right forward on the visiting team, securing the first basket. Hopper immediately took revenge and came up the floor and tied the score with a sensational one-hander. The score see-sawed for about ten minutes. The most of the playing was done in Monson's half of the floor and although they were continually bombarding the basket they were unable to get more than 10 points the first half to the visitors' five. In the second half the visitors were completely outclassed. The passing of the home team was never better, the final score being 33 to 11. Maynard was easily the star for the Northampton team, while the work of Captain Dunsford for the home team was one of the best exhibitions of basketball ever witnessed on the local floor. In the preliminary the freshmen defeated the sophomores in the interclass series by the score of 22 to 14. Hillard was the star for the freshmen, while the work of Fagan for the sophomores was of a high order. The scores:

LEGALLY HANGED

By CHARLES LEWIS PHIPPS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Which one of all your cases," I asked Wilcox, the celebrated criminal lawyer, "has most excited your interest?"

"That of Mathews, who was accused of murder."

"Was he innocent or guilty?"

"Innocent."

"Did you secure his acquittal?"

"No."

"Hanged?"

"Yes; legally hanged."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I'll tell you. Mathews was in the employ of Henderson, the man who was murdered. I don't care to go into the details of the case; I will only say that there was so much circumstantial evidence against him that from the first I despaired of saving his neck. I knew he was innocent, though he could no more explain the circumstances that pointed to his guilt than I could."

"How did you know he was innocent?"

"By both experience and intuition. I defy any of my clients to deceive me in this regard. I simply look them in the eye, and that tells me the story.

"There was everything about Mathews' case to interest me. He was a younger son of a British country gentleman and in love with the daughter of another British gentleman. His mother had no knowledge of his having been accused of crime, much less having been convicted, for I could do nothing to prove him innocent. He showed me his mother's letters, and it was distressing to read them. His betrothed was also writing him without any knowledge that he was under sentence of death. A week before he was to be hanged a letter from solicitors in England was handed him, informing him that a bachelor uncle had died and left him a large fortune."

"Upon my word! It was an interesting case, wasn't it?"

"I should say so. If ever there was a man who had everything to live for Mathews had. And to be judicially executed without ever having wronged any one in his life was simply awful. You have no idea how having a life on your hands wears on a man, and this case nearly drove me insane.

"But I braced myself for a gigantic effort. After conferring with Mathews I decided to cable the solicitors in England, giving them the situation and asking how much funds they could cable me within a few days. They placed £20,000 to my credit, and with this sum I went to work. There was no use in trying to secure delay or a new trial. What I must do was to interest the sheriff. I had a long secret conference with him, but could not move him to act for money, though I so far secured his judgment that he must do an official wrong in hanging Mathews that he consented to wink at any game I might practice, provided it could be kept secret.

"I got a friend of mine who was a professor in a medical college to apply for the body of Mathews as soon as he was dead. This enabled me to gain possession of the condemned man the moment the hanging was over. Then I "fixed" every official who was to be present at the hanging. Mathews put in a request that there should be no spectators present. I could not even be present myself. But there was not one of the officials to whom I paid less than $10,000, and the hangman got $25,000. My friend the doctor was the only one present who got nothing. He had a coffin ready for the corpse as soon as it was taken from the gallows and a hearse to carry it to the hospital.

"Well, that night I went to the hospital and found Mathews locked in the doctor's room."

"But how was the hanging managed?"

"I don't know; I never asked. There were half a dozen men paid by the state to see that Mathews was hanged, and I paid every one of them—in all $100,000—to go through the process without hanging him. All I know is that I paid the money and found Mathews alive in the doctor's room. Some burnt cork, a woolly wig and a suit of clothes procured from a Jew tailor fixed him so that no one would know him. I had a steerage ticket for him in an outgoing steamer, and early the next morning he was on his way to England."

"He must have been very grateful to you."

"Grateful! I should say so. Before parting with me he made me promise that I would come over as soon as possible and see him. I couldn't go for a year, and then I found him in possession of £50,000 a year income and married to the woman he loved. He met me on the steamer, and the first thing he did was to impress it upon me that neither his mother nor his wife nor any one living except his solicitors knew that he was judicially dead in America. He had often tried to bring himself to unburden his secret to his wife, but had always failed.

"Mathews entertained me royally and begged me to suggest some way for him to pay the debt he owed me, even if it required every cent of his fortune. I assured him that I took more comfort in his case than in all the cases I had ever won, though I had lost it.

"After spending a month with him I left him to return. He could hardly bear to part with me and regretted that it wouldn't be safe for him to come to America or he would cross the ocean with me. He shed tears when I came away."

Wanted a Supply.

"Politics," remarked a Washington official, "is a science as well as a circus. One of the funniest things I ever heard in that connection was about the cowboy delegate to the constitutional convention of Nevada when that territory was about to become a state. In the constitution was the stereotyped paragraph about the new state's having two senators to represent it in Washington. When it was read to the convention the cowboy delegate rose and yelled out: 'What's the use of limiting it to two? We're overwhelmingly Republican, and we can elect as many as we want.'"—Washington Star.

Putting the Owl to Use.

There is a choice old recipe, in which the owl figures, "to make any one that sleepeth answer to whatsoever thou ask," given in "Physick For the Poor," published in London in 1657. It says that you are to "take the heart of an owl and his left leg and put that upon the breast of one that sleepeth, and they shall reveal whatsoever thou shalt ask them."

The Hindus, however, declare that the flesh or blood of an owl will make a person insane who eats or drinks it. On this account men who are devoured by jeniousy of a rival or hatred of an enemy come furtively to the market and purchase an owl. In silence they carry it home and secretly prepare a decoction, which an accomplice will put into the food or drink of the object of their malignant designs.

NO REASON FOR IT.

When Palmer Citizens Show the Certain Way Out.

There can be no just reason why any reader of this will continue to suffer the tortures of an aching back, the annoyance of urinary disorders, the dangers of any kidney ills when relief is so near at hand and the most positive proof given that they can be cured. Read what a Palmer citizen says:

G. H. Morgan, 61 S. Main St., Palmer, Mass., says: "It is ten years since I used Doan's Kidney Pills, but I have not forgotten the great relief I obtained from this remedy. I had a case of kidney trouble of several years standing and was unable to find anything that would help me. My back ached constantly and I often felt lame all over. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and attended by a burning sensation when being voided. Upon a friend's advice, I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and in a short time they cured me. The cure has proven to be a permanent one and consequently I value Doan's Kidney Pills very highly."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Greatest Story in History for Americans Being Unfolded Day by Day in the Boston Globe—Pictorial Narrative of Civil War.

We have come to the 50th anniversary of the most stirring events in American history, the great revolt of the south and the mighty uprising of the north in the war that overthrew slavery and kept the union whole. The Boston Globe will unfold for its readers the story of that tragic period day by day, so that they can follow its dramatic occurrences just as if they were living in the historic days of '61.

All the stirring scenes will be reproduced in a way that will vividly bring them back to the memories of the older people and indelibly impress them on the minds even of the children. There will be a story in the Boston Globe every day that will mark the semicentennial of some important action in the drama of the nation on the eve of the civil war.

Collected, the articles will form a simple, complete and accurate pictorial history of the successive steps that led up to the first shot in the great conflict. In a scrap book they will make a unique journal of the greatest conflict in American history.

The time to begin the series is now, as it is already running in the Boston Globe.

A Problem That Stumped Rousseau.

A curious little book is an old, old treatise on aeronautics by Jean Jacques Rousseau, called "Le Nouveau Dedale." Like Leonardo da Vinci and Cyrano de Bergerac, Rousseau was hanuted by the dream of aerial navigation. We read: "Men walk on the earth, they sail on the water and swim in it. Is not the air an element, like the others? What business have the birds to shut us out of their premises while we are made welcome in those of the fishes?" Rousseau took no stock in any theories propounded by the Darius Greens of his day. He sifted the matter for himself and thought it involved two problems. First to find a body lighter than air, so that it would rise. He imagined that sooner or later such a body might present itself. There was no telling. But what stumped him was his second problem—how to make that obliging body stop rising and how in creation to make it come down. This was too tough for Jean Jacques, and he wound up his book by admitting it. For a long time "Le Nouveau Dedale" remained unpublished, appearing only in 1801.

When a Ship Turns Turtle.

To "turn turtle" means, in nautical language, that a ship rolls too heavily, fails to recover herself and after a brief period on her beam ends turns topsy turvy, so that her keel points skyward. Then, of course, she sinks. Frequently the compressed air imprisoned in her hull blows her bottom out as she goes down, or if she is a steamer her boilers burst, with like results. As a rule, ships turn turtle because they are burdened with too much "top hamper" or from lack of sufficient ballast, or both causes combined. Rarely does it happen that there are any survivors, but there is one notable exception in the case of the battleship Captain, which was lost after this fashion in the bay of Biscay. In her case exactly three minutes elapsed from the time she first turned turtle until she finally sank, and forty of her crew of 500 men clambered up her side as she rolled over and on to her keel. Of these eighteen men were eventually rescued and were able to describe later on precisely what occurred.—Pearson's.

Mining For Coffin Planks.

One of the most curious industries in the world is the business of mining for coffin planks, which is carried on in upper Tonkin, a portion of the French possessions in southeastern Asia. In a certain district in this province there exists a great underground deposit of logs, which were probably the trunks of trees engulfed by an earthquake or some other convulsions of nature at a comparatively recent period. The trees are a species of pine known to the natives and also to some extent to European commerce as "nam-hou." The wood is almost imperishable and has the quality, either through its nature or as the result of its sojourn underground, of resisting decay from damp. This quality makes it particularly valuable for the manufacture of coffins, and for this purpose it is largely exported to Europe. The trees are often a yard in diameter. They are buried in sandy earth at a depth of from two to eight yards and are dug up by native labor as demand is made for them. —Harper's Weekly.

He Gave Up A Fortune

Because He Couldn't Wait a Few Hours For a Smoke

By JAMES P. WALKER

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Having proposed to Genevieve, daughter of Colonel Mechard of the —th United States infantry and having been referred to her father, I wrote him a note asking when I could see him alone, there being an important matter about which I desired to confer with him. Of course he knew what that matter was. In reply I received an invitation to dine with him at his club—the Army and Navy. We dined in a private room. I purposely waited till the dinner was finished and the colonel had drunk his share of the wine. I was about to open the subject for which we had met when he stopped me by laying his hand on my arm. Then, reaching back of him, he pushed a button. A waiter appeared, and the colonel ordered him to bring one first rate cigar.

Now, Genevieve had posted me on one matter about which I must be very careful. On no account was I to let her father know that I used tobacco in any form. The colonel detested even the word tobacco.

"Thanks, colonel," I said. "I never smoke."

"Oh, you don't?" he replied. Then, turning to the waiter, he repeated the order. The cigar was brought and placed before me. "You either smoke that cigar," said my host, "or the object"—

He paused. I knew what he meant, and, taking the cigar, I cut off the end, lit it and began to smoke.

"Before entering upon any other subject," the colonel continued, "I have a story to tell you. My family knows that there is something about tobacco that excites my ire. If they knew the cause it would make trouble, at least between me and my wife. But I won't tell the yarn wrongside foremost; I'll begin at the beginning.

"When I went to West Point the object of my ambition was not to take high grade in my studies, but to be a cadet officer. I was very careful not to get demerits and kept my equipments well polished. I was made a corporal, which put me in the line of promotion, and I confidently looked forward to being a cadet captain when I became a first class man. Immediately after my promotion I strolled into the room of one of my classmates, where I found several cadets smoking. It was then against the rules of the academy for cadets to smoke. I was offered a cigar—I had never touched tobacco in any form—and, like a fool, took one."

The colonel grew red in the face, and there was an irritated look in his eye.

"Well, colonel?" I said, blowing a cloud.

"An inspecting officer walked in and caught us all smoking. My chevrons were stripped from my arm, and I served the rest of my term a private."

"That was too bad," I remarked sympathetically.

"It was nothing compared with what followed. That one whiff of the weed gave me a taste for tobacco that I have never got over."

"But you don't smoke."

"No, I don't, and if you'll be patient you'll learn the reason."

"Go on, colonel."

"From that time forward, feeling that I might as well be hanged for an old sheep as a lamb, I smoked like a ferryboat. I was caught smoking so often that my demerits came very near preventing me from graduating. As it was, I was put into the infantry instead of the engineers, where, when I entered, I hoped to come out.

"The course I laid out for myself was this: I vowed I would not remain in the army, marry and bring up a family of children on an officer's pay. Being poor as a church mouse, I resolved to marry a rich girl and make the army a lifelong profession.

"After tackling a good many girls who I supposed had money I met with success with one whom I will call Amelia Jones. She was the only daughter of old Jones, who had made a fortune in a patent of some kind, and his daughter told me that he would settle half a million on her the day she was married, provided he approved of her fiance. Just as soon as I proposed to Amelia and was accepted she told me that when I came to meet her father I must stop smoking till after the wedding. The old man was violently opposed to tobacco"—

"Singular," I interrupted, "that the same thing is repeated in the case of your daughter."

"Not so singular as you suppose when you have heard me out.

"Amelia said that after the promised settlement had been made I could blow a cloud in the old duffer's face if I liked—or words to that effect—for he couldn't take back what he'd given. Since I was to get a nice girl and $25,000 a year with her I thought I could manage to stop smoking during an engagement, especially since I was due to be ordered west in three months and we were to be married before the change came.

"That was the hardest three months to get through in my life. I've served on alkali plains and in a wilderness, but I could smoke and didn't suffer. I had promised my fiance that I would take no risk—indeed, that I would not smoke once till the expiration of the term, or, rather, till 12 o'clock noon on the day we were to be married. At first I was so hungry for a smoke that I kept a few cigars in a bureau drawer where I could smell them, but I found it was like a drunkard smelling liquor. I had to give it up. I kept a record of the days to be passed before the wedding day and scratched off each day as it passed. And when they began to dwindle every day seemed a month—not before the wedding, but before I could smoke.

"At last the day of my emancipation came. I had received my orders to go west, and we were to take a train leaving at 8 p. m. The ceremony was to take place at 5. I bought a thousand of the best cigars I could find to have them ready and to take with me where such cigars were not to be procured. On my wedding day I had my luncheon served in my room, and after I had eaten and drunk I opened a box. The odor was delicious.

"Then the thought came to me that the time of my pledge had expired at 12 o'clock. An uncontrollable desire seized me to smoke just one of those cigars. I took one out of the box, put it back, took it out again, smelled of it and, as ill luck would have it, saw a box of matches within reach. I scratched the match, bit off the end of the cigar, resisted temptation till the match was nearly consumed, then, touching the flame to the cigar, drew in a long breath of delicious smoke.

"I hadn't got the thing fairly going before that old villain Jones opened the door and came into the room."

The colonel grew so red in the face at the memory of this second wrecking of his hopes by tobacco that I feared he would have a stroke of apoplexy. Finally his ire subsided, and he continued:

"The old fool had come to my quarters to ask me to sign a paper connected with the settlement. At the sight of his intended son-in-law puffing clouds of smoke, the odor of which made him sick, he turned and left the room, banging the door behind him.

"For half an hour I acted like a madman. Then, having quieted down a bit, I went over to the house where the Jones family were. I found a commotion. As soon as I was shown into the room where Amelia was and the door was closed behind me she stood looking at me, furious.

"'Fool!' she exclaimed. 'You have spoiled everything.'

"'What's the upshot?' I asked.

"'Father says that we can proceed with the wedding if we like, but there is to be no settlement.'

"'Father is an old dragon, and I'd rather not have a dragon for a father-in-law,' I snapped angrily.

"'And I'd rather have a man for a husband who is not an idiot,' she retorted.

"'An idiot!' I replied. 'West Point doesn't graduate idiots.'

"'Will you oblige me by leaving me?'

"I said something more—I don't remember what, though I do know that it was under the influence of anger of the most pallid kind—irritation with oneself. I only succeeded in drawing more bitter retorts from the girl I was to have married, and I finally left her."

The colonel was so worked upon by the reminiscence that I was glad to see him pause again for breath and composure. Finally he went on:

"There was no wedding. The old fool was obdurate, the bride to be was disgusted with my weakness in yielding to temptation, and I was mad as a March hare. I went to my western post alone, but before going I swore a great oath that I would never again yield to the temptation of tobacco. I would drink, gamble, dissipate in any and every form, but never again would I yield to the weed.

"I know what you wish to say to me," he continued, "and you have my consent, but you couldn't please me better than by smoking yourself into your grave. As for me, a cigar is an excitant of a kind of madness. Tobacco cost me promotion in the army, and it deprived me of a fortune. I do not mean that I would exchange the woman I love, the mother of my children, for Amelia Jones, but I do mean that I have never recovered having lost a fortune by yielding to temptation.

"Now you understand why I would not for the world stand toward you in the position that old heathen Jones stood toward me. Smoke, smoke, smoke, smoke to your heart's content!"

He pushed the button again and ordered another cigar for me. I protested that I never smoked two cigars, the one following close upon the other, but dreaded to oppose him lest he fly into a passion.

My application for his daughter's hand was perfunctory. Indeed, it was an anticlimax. I was accepted on the condition that I never should stop smoking.

My father-in-law stood in a very singular position. He loved tobacco, but could not use it without the past coming up in such force as to risk his very life. I kept the secret that he had confided to me, and to this day my wife cannot understand why I am more of a smoker than before she married me, and that, too, without any opposition whatever from her father.

Colonel Mechard's story is an illustration of the trifling incidents that determine one's career. Had it not been for his first episode—the unexpected coming of the inspector at West Point—he would not have been so affected by the second. The two together gave an important direction to his life's surroundings He was devoted to his family, but somehow never could recover from the shock of having given up half a million dollars for a cigar. I tell him that so long as the fortune was to have been his wife's instead of his own he made a wise choice.

Anthony Trollope's First Earnings.

A literary man recalls Anthony Trollope's little gloat over the first fruits of his pen. "I send you a copy of 'The Warden,'" he wrote to Lord Houghton in 1866, "which Mr. Longman assures me is the last of the first edition. There were, I think, only 750 printed, and they have been over ten years in hand. But I regard the book with affection, as I made £9 2s. 6d. by the first year's sales, having previously written and published for ten years without any such golden result. Since then I have improved even upon that." Trollope, of course, "improved upon that" in no uncertain fashion.—Westminster Gazette.

It Was Real.

"My, this must have been exciting!" says Mrs. Bilmers, who is reading the paper. "A twenty foot boa constrictor escaped from the zoo yesterday and was captured after it had climbed halfway up a telegraph pole."

"And I swore off when I saw it as I went downtown!" growled Mr. Bilmers disgustedly.

"What are you muttering?" she asked.

"Nothing. I just said it must have been a ticklish job."—Chicago Post.

A Chain of Evidence

It Convicted a Man of a Crime He Had Not Committed.

By MARGARET BARR

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

In January, 1908, Gustav Jinsinger, a literary man, and his wife, Mary Jinsinger, rented a house at 145 Croker street, in the city of London. They lived apparently happily together till the husband took in Ruth Kirkwood, a typist and stenographer. From that time the author and the typist were seen by the neighbors to be frequently together, and Mrs. Jinsinger was observed often in tears. She was in poor health, and a specialist in brain diseases was seen to make visits to the house.

On the 10th of March, 1908, Mrs. Jinsinger was seen for the last time at her home. Miss Martha Ellison, living opposite, saw her enter her house and close the front door behind her. No one after this date saw her come out. Her husband and Ruth Kirkwood were seen to come out and go away, both separately and together. On the 30th of April vans appeared before their door and removed the furniture. Miss Ellison saw Mr. Jinsinger and the typist leave the house together.

The next occupants of the house were Peter Hartigan and John Flynn. They were old men, living exclusive lives, wearing the meanest clothing and evidently very poor. They left the premises after occupying them three months, never having paid any rent. The agent for the house reported that he went to it and found it deserted. No one saw them move out, and it was supposed that they had done so at night when no one was about.

During the autumn of 1910 No. 145 Croker street was razed to make room for a business block. The cellar was widened and deepened to fit the new structure. Several feet under the old cellar floor the excavators came upon a human body, or, rather, the remains of a body, that had been considerably eaten away by quicklime or some destructive agent. The place of burial and the attempted destruction of the body excited suspicion. The case was reported to the police, who made inquiries as to the past occupants of the premises, and the doings of the Jinsingers came to light. On chemical analysis the body was found to contain traces of arsenic.

The ease at once arrested the attention of detectives. The appearance of the typist, the facts of Mrs. Jinsinger's depression and that she had not been seen to leave the house seemed to indicate that Jinsinger and Miss Kirkwood had been lovers and that they had removed Mrs. Jinsinger that they might marry. If Jinsinger could be found living with the typist there would be sufficient evidence against him to convict him before any jury. A hunt was made for the author, but for a long while nothing was heard of him. At last it was learned that he, accompanied by a girl, had sailed for America. A detective crossed in a faster steamer, arrested him and the girl, who proved to be Miss Kirkwood, and took both to London for trial.

Jinsinger was convicted principally on the evidence that has been stated here. Miss Kirkwood was acquitted of being an accessory to the murder after the fact. Jinsinger was sentenced to be hanged, according to the English law, about three weeks after his conviction.

One morning in the spring of 1908 Edward Burnes, a tinner living on the outskirts of London, on going out to work found a woman lying unconscious before his door. He carried her into the house and put her under the care of his wife. She soon regained consciousness, but could give no account of herself. She could not even remember her name. She was permitted to spend the day in the tinner's house, and when he returned in the evening he reported the case to a physician. Through the doctor's influence the woman was removed to a hospital, where she was entered as a permanent patient. Two years after her going there one morning on taking up a newspaper she gave a shriek. She had seen a notice of the coming execution of Gustav Jinsinger. A number of persons collected about her and learned from her that the name Jinsinger had brought back her memory. She said she was the woman for whose murder Jinsinger was to be executed.

A reprieve was granted to Jinsinger, who, on proof of the identity of his wife, was released. Subsequently the detectives made a hunt for Peter Hartigan and John Flynn. After a long search they found Hartigan and demanded to know what had become of Flynn. He contradicted himself in his replies and, being further questioned by experts in such cases, finally told that while the two lived together at 145 Croker street the house had been infested with rats. Hartigan had bought arsenic with which to poison them. One night Flynn, being ill, arose in the dark for some medicine he had been taking, got hold of the arsenic by mistake and died from taking a large dose. Fearing that he would be accused of having poisoned Flynn, Hartigan had endeavored to destroy the body with quicklime; but, failing to do so entirely, he had buried what was left of it in the cellar.

Hartigan, being asked why he had not called in medical assistance for Flynn, gave two reasons for his failure to do so—first, Flynn had died very soon after taking the arsenic; second, Flynn was a miser with £10,000 hoarded. Hartigan, after Flynn's death, secured this money and left the premises in the night.

No Whiskers on His Sea Food.

Two colored porters paused to rest a moment on their mops in a downtown office building recently. "Boy," said one, smacking his lips, "did you ever eat mushrat?" "Mushrat?" returned the other. "No; I never eat any mushrat. The only fancy sea food I ever fussed with was lobster."—New York World.

RAILROAD HEARINGS.

Palmer and Brimfield Hear Grand Trunk Petitions.

BRIMFIELD OBJECTS TO LOCATION.

Passes Too Near Cemetery and Can Go Another Route. Palmer Offers No Criticism.

A public hearing on the petition of the Southern New England railroad corporation for a right of way in the town of Palmer was held in the selectmen's room last Saturday afternoon. The railroad was represented by Judge Thomas W. Kenefick of Palmer He stated that the company proposed to build from Palmer to Providence, R I, and had already received a certificate of public exigency from the railroad commissioners; it is now seeking rights to build. The hearing Saturday was the sixth held in Massachusetts towns.

Judge Kenefick stated that the plan presented differed from that filed with the railroad commissioners and was considerably different from the one the directors would like, the one running on the west side of the valley to North Monson, thence to Foskett's Mills and past the farm of Mr. Baker This route would require the tunneling of Brimfield mountain and there would be about 350 feet rise between the grade at the station and at the top of the hill in Brimfield To maintain an even 1 per cent grade would require a distance of seven miles. The former plan called for only about 100 feet of construction in Palmer, all in the yard of the Central Vermont road at the south end of the village The new route offers cheaper construction. Only two dwellings will be taken, the "Hancock" house near the electric station, and the "Judge Robinson" farm further east.

The track after leaving the yards of the Central Vermont railway will turn to the left near the residence of Cornelius J. Foley on the Monson road, will pass near the mill of the Quaboag Leather Company, and crossing the river and street railway tracks on a trestle, it will pass over the state highway and Boston and Albany track in the same manner. After leaving the Hancock place it will pass over several old roads; in some cases the location will be changed and possibly the discontinuance of others may be asked for Paralleling the state highway as far as the King farm, owned by L. A. Conant, it will recross the highway east of that farm, either by trestle or by the continuance of the viaduct by which the Quaboag will be crossed to the Brimfield hills near the West Brimfield schoolhouse. It is probable that a flag station may be erected at West Brimfield, but the grade is steep at this point and the matter is uncertain at present.

The location asked for does not injure any considerable amount of property, most of the territory being farming or pasture land, and no opposition manifested itself at the hearing It is probable that the location asked for will be granted so far as the selectmen are concerned. Further petition for the relocation or discontinuance of highways will be presented to the county commissioners if such action is desired.

The hearing before the Brimfield selectmen on the petition of the Grand Trunk railroad for a location through Brimfield was attended by about 40 voters in the town hall Friday afternoon. Orrin Hicks, chairman of the selectmen, presided No vote was taken, but strong feeling was expressed by those who spoke, against the proposed location.

The reason for this protest was that the route asked for by the railroad passes only 198 feet south of the Brimfield cemetery and has a turnout of about a quarter of a mile in length extending from the Lincoln estate near the mill pond to the land owned by James O'Neil. The other location, which the representatives of the railroad admitted was as feasible, but would cost more, would run the other side of Mill brook and thus be farther removed from the cemetery.

Charles S. Tarbell, ex selectman, expressed himself as decidedly in opposition to the railroad's going so near the cemetery, and asked how it would be to have a long freight train pass within 200 feet when a burial was in progress. He also spoke of the probable need, sometime, of extension to the south and concluded his remarks by saying: "If we are going to do anything about it, now is the time. With the railroad it is a question of dollars and cents; with us it is a question of deep sentiment and principle. I hope and trust that the selectmen will not see fit to grant this location." George M. Hitchcock, for many years the sexton of Brimfield, spoke along the same lines as Mr. Tarbell. He showed that the most feasible extension which must next be made to the cemetery will be to the south. The several extensions that have been made have been in that direction except the one to the east, made two years ago It is only 33 years since the last extension was made to the south. Others who spoke against the proposed location were John M. Warren, William Spooner and Orns E Parker A great objection to the proposed location also is the grading necessary to raise the highway 20 feet above the present level for an overhead crossing, making not only a great elevation in the road near the cemetery but a long slope as an encroachment.

The Brimfield cemetery is one of great beauty in the character of its monuments and its location, and there is a strong protest on the part of those who have gone out from the town, as well as Brimfield people, against the injury that the stones and monuments would receive from the smoke of locomotives and the desecration of a hallowed spot by such close proximity to a railroad. The removal of the route to the south side of Mill brook would very little effect whatever convenience the townspeople might derive from the road.

Among those representing old Brimfield families who have written letters to the selectmen setting forth objections to the proposed location are Dr. Frederic A. Charles of Andover, who writes from observation in similar instances, and Charles W. Stoughton of New York of the firm of Stonghton & Stonghton, the well-known architects, who designed the soldiers' and sailors' monument of that city Mr. Stonghton writes of the certain injury to all the monuments by blackening them with the soot of engines and discoloring with attendant dirt. He cites the fact that the soldiers' and sailors' monument in Riverside Park in New York has been subject to the same evil of the smoke and dirt of trains, and that that the cleansing of that monument in the past ten years has been of great expense to the city.

Mrs. Theron Beals was called to Westfield Sunday by the illness of her mother.

Over Ninety Years Old.

Death of Aged Wales Woman Saturday. A Fine Christian Character.

Mrs. Mary Royce, 93, the oldest resident of Wales, died at her home on the Union road in that town Saturday.

Mrs. Royce was born in Sturbridge Feb. 28, 1818, the daughter of Samuel and Polly Hooker. She was married to Joseph M. Royce Jr. of Wales April 19, 1844. He died 26 years ago. There were born to the couple six children, Andrew J, Julia A., Edgar W., Elizabeth M, Rosie V and Ida M., all of whom are living with the exception of Edgar W., who died 18 years ago.

Mrs. Royce lived until 37 years of age in Sturbridge. At the age of 16 years she became a member of the choir of the Congregational church, and soon was leading soprano, rendering solos to the delight of her hearers at the age of 18 She united with the church and during her stay was an active and faithful worker

She moved to Wales from Sturbridge 56 years ago with her husband and children and settled upon a farm in the south part of the town, where she lived since Soon after coming to Wales her hearing became impaired to such an extent that she was unable to converse freely, consequently her life was more or less shut in with her family cares, although she continued to attend church. She was a woman of fine Christian character, beloved by all who knew her. Since the death of her husband, she had personally conducted the affairs of her 100 acre farm and until within a year or two had planted and taken care of her garden herself, thus showing that she possessed some of the energy and pluck of her relative, fighting General Joe Hooker. She retained all her faculties until the end.

Her children surviving are Julia Belcher of Stafford, Ct, Andrew J. Royce, Elizabeth M. Heck, Rosie V. Cooke and Ida M. Squire of Wales.

The funeral was held Tuesday, Rev. William Jennings of Brimfield officiating. Miss Annie Kronse of Monson sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and "Thy Will be Done" Burial was in the Laurel Hill cemetery.

Special Town Meeting in Ware.

A special town meeting was held in the town hall in Ware last Friday evening at 7.30 with only 30 voters present. Town Clerk E P. Morse acted as clerk and J D. Deslauriers, a member of the board of selectmen, was chosen moderator.

The fourth article was taken up, and under it H M. Coney moved that $120 be transferred to the account for repairing highways and bridges from the annual appropriations made for street pavings. It was also voted under article 2 to authorize the selectmen to transfer any unexpended balances of appropriations and other funds in the treasury not otherwise appropriated and use the same for other municipal purposes as they may see fit

The final article for action was number 3, to consider and act upon the question of the acceptance by the town of a deed of land, as offered by Mr. and Mrs J H. Grenville Gilbert, subject to conditions therein stated, a draft of which proposed deed has been placed in the hands of the town clerk. Attorney George D. Storrs made a motion for the acceptance in accordance with the conditions and for extending a vote of thanks by the town for the continued generosity of Mr. and Mrs Gilbert The motion was carried unanimously.

The deed is for two parcels of land, one of six acres lying between Ware river and the macadam road to Gilbertville, or east of the river, a piece of land through which both railroads pass between Ware and Gilbertville. It lies opposite Grenville park, at a point where the river narrows, and on the Gilbertville road is marked by a heavy growth of timber at its easterly end. The other piece of land is perhaps three times as large and extends northerly for the most part from the land previously given to form the original Grenville park The park will in this way be doubled in size and will have in time to come another exit upon Church street, near the reservoir. There is considerable growth of timber on this additional gift and the park will be of much greater value in years to come. The gift is made upon the main condition which accompanied the original 20 acres, namely, that it shall always be used as a public park, subject to such regulations as properly may be prescribed; that it shall be known as a memorial to the late son of the grantors, and that, with the other, shall be named for him Grenville park.

K. of C. Meet at Ware.

MUCH WANTED MAN CAUGHT.

Severely Carved Vermont Employer Last Summer.

APPREHENDED IN MONSON THIS WEEK

Man Assaulted Is Still an Invalid. Assailant Moving From Place To Place.

A man for whom diligent search has been made for the last eight months was taken into custody at Monson Wednesday, when State Detective Bligh and a Boston detective arrested "Jack" Imperiale, a quarry worker, on a charge of assault with intent to kill. The offense was committed in Williamstown, Vt., in July of last year. Imperiale was working there at that time and became engaged in an altercation with Edward McGlynn, the foreman. McGlynn was slashed horribly with a big knife, there being severe cuts on the body and one arm being cut in such a manner as to sever the cords and completely paralyze it; McGlynn is still an invalid from the effects of his hurts

Imperiale left at once after the trouble, and has since wandered from place to place He is an unusually clever man, and moved quietly when he found the officers were on his trail, and he seemed to know as soon as they when they were "hot" on the trail. He made no resistance Wednesday, but refused to talk. He gave his age as 36, but is believed to be at least 40 He had been in Monson only a short time It is said he has a brother who was one of the yeggmen who held up a Lynn manufacturer on the main street in broad daylight last summer, taking the payroll which he had just secured from the bank and fatally shooting the man and a policeman. Imperiale was taken to Springfield, and Vermont officers came for him yesterday.

Change at Wilbraham Academy.

Co-educational Plan to Be Abandoned And Only Boys Admitted.

The trustees of Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham took important action at their meeting in Springfield yesterday when they voted to do away with the co-educational plan of the school and admit only boys to the institution. They also raised the price of tuition from $250 to $500 per year. The change will take place at the opening of school in the fall. It is expected that this move, which is not in accord with the views of Principal Davis, will result in an entire new faculty, not a member of the present board being expected to remain. The academy was founded in Newmarket, N H, in 1817, and moved to Wilbraham in 1824 It is a denominational school of the Methodists, and will remain such under the new plan.

Runaway Accident at Ware.

A. G. Corey and Walter S. Beebe of Hampden met with an accident while driving down a hill near Randolph Beebe's place Tuesday The forward axle of the wagon broke and one wheel came off. Both Mr. Corey and Mr. Beebe were thrown out, the latter injuring his right shoulder slightly. Mr Corey, who retained his hold on the reins, was thrown over the dashboard and was struck on the head by the wheel as it rolled on its downward way. Mr. Corey, however, hung on to the reins. After being dragged about two rods, he succeeded in stopping the horse and upon investigation it was found he had sustained no serious injuries. He then borrowed a buggy of Randolph Beebe and continued on his way.

Doings of the Legislature.

Two Radical Votes — Plea For Cleaner Milk — Bar and Bottle Bill Fight — Investigation of Holding Companies — No Judgeship Nominations.

BOSTON, March 1, 1911.

It looks as if the old-fashioned conservative elements in the state were losing their grip. Two votes in the House seem to show this. One was the overwhelming vote to require railroads to furnish water and individual drinking cups free, and the other was the vote of 184 to 34 for indorsement of the Sullowey pension bill in Congress. Each of these votes shows that pretty nearly all of the House are on what may be called the radical side. Of course it is to be expected that there will be many radical votes in those times, but there has always been a material element of the House which seemed to be conservative from sheer caution about going too fast and too far, and either of these two propositions would have called out a large proportion of conservative votes, even if it had been defeated This year it is different. This House seems to dip into a lower stratum of popular sub-soil, or to a greater height of political principle,—whichever way way you look at it,—than has been reached by any House before. The talk in the corridors about the veto of the civil service bill shows that there is a larger element of sympathy than has been usual. It looks as if there were coming to the front, if the membership of the present House is an indication, a generation which acts more from a collective point of view than any of the past What makes this attitude of the House all the more noticeable is that there is no new leader and no new light which they seem to follow. These votes are not the result of some dominating personality, bringing men to his support by the force of a stronger will or bigger brain. No such new Hamilton or Webster has come above the horizon. This feeling is just the widespread diffusion of what seems to be a new standard. There is more of a disposition to make things out of the public. There is less regard for the strictness of defense of the public welfare compared with taking care of people who call out sympathy. This is evidently a reaction of the people against the domination of the money influence in politics. Poor people have had a hard time enough to protect themselves from exploitation. Now, when things seem to be coming their way, they act with the same feeling of antagonism to the powers higher up. If this tendency is not counteracted by a larger development of true patriotism, than there is an era of democracy before us which will be also an era of demagoguery and when the rich will be exploited for the benefit of the poor. Justice, less than sentiment, is the sufferer. This is a tendency to be watched closely as the session develops, for we may see some very manifest evils of democracy unless there is a balance of forces.

Yet it is not easy to say that there should be a halt called yet in any direction as far as legislation is concerned for the benefit of the people who have been under the harrow thus far. To-day there has been a very interesting hearing before the joint committees on the inspection of milk. Whatever be the jokers in different propositions, there is no doubt that the milk consumers' league, for instance, is mightily in earnest and is in the right when it insists, with all the force of able counsel, that there must be more cleanliness and a better grade of milk. Terrible accounts have been given from the Boston floating hospital here to-day of the destruction of infant life caused in material degree by the intestinal diseases of babies in summer, in which diseases filthy and unfit milk play a considerable part. Forty per cent of the cases in that hospital are dysentery and milk figures largely as a cause. Yesterday, Agent P. M. Harwood of the State Dairy Bureau put in a strong indictment against evaporated or concentrated milk, showing that the manufactures use inferior grades of natural milk in the making of their product and that it is a waste of money, compared with the purchase of whole, natural milk of the Massachusetts standard. Yet there has been a phenomenal decline in the milk shipments to Boston. During the last December and January the receipts of milk by cars in Boston were almost 2,000,000 quarts per month less than for the previous year for the same months, while that year was about as much a falling off from the year before. During the last year there has been a decline of over 15,000 in the number of cows in Massachusetts, and the monthly reports of the state board of health show, every month, that many former milk raisers have gone out of the business. Yet milk is in increasing favor with the doctors as an article of food. The condensed milk manufacturers protested against a law which would compel their product to be up to the standard of milk solids when diluted with a given quantity of water. The farmers resist inspection under the present system, claiming that it is extreme and unjust. So the public comes to the state house for protection.

It is evident that the fight over the repeal of the bar and bottle law will be one of large public interest, for it has called out a crowd such as not been exceeded, save by that notable one at the woman suffrage hearing. The opponents of the repeal sent word around to the churches in Boston and vicinity asking them to show their interest by their attendance and by sending word of their opposition to their representatives and senators. The liquor interests have so much at stake financially that they also turned out and the consequence was that the largest hearing room in the state house was nowhere large enough, and the hearing was extended over this forenoon and afternoon. There is much personal feeling on the two sides. The liquor sellers hold that their means of livelihood are attacked needlessly and that a large business of the state will suffer if the bar and bottle law becomes operative on May 1, as it will unless there is a repeal. On the other hand, the temperance people refuse to take the business arguments into consideration and have no space for the tale of men who will be turned out of employment if the law goes into effect. They are thinking of the moral side of the case and of the family of the man who carries home his bottle. Hence there is no compromise or common understanding possible, and the fight will be to the knife and the knife to the hilt.

Let particular note be taken of a unanimous report to-day by the taxation committee that the tax commissioner investigate the business of holding companies, or voluntary associations, and see whether they should be brought under the regulation of the Legislature. This is really a matter of first business importance. The first notorious case of such a voluntary association was the New England G and Coke company, which, accor current belief, was the parent

PALMER NEWS.

Possible Town Officials.

Some Names Which Will Be Presented For Selection at Caucuses.

As the time draws near for the caucuses which will nominate candidates for town office, it becomes apparent that there will be no dearth of names to select from. Two members of the present board of selectmen will be candidates for reëlection Harold W. Brainerd and John Millerick. Other names which are heard in this connection are those of George Warriner of the wire mill district, C. D Holden of Bondsville, William Sullivan of Thorndike and C. A. LeGro of Palmer; the latter was a candidate last year and was next to the third man elected in point of votes received. For overseer of the poor there will be at least four names to select from, F. J. Hamilton and L E Chandler of Palmer, John Fortier of the Four Corners and John Sullivan of Bondsville. George E Mooers of Thorndike and James Wilson of Three Rivers will be candidates for reëlection to the school committee, and a new name will be that of John K. Monlton of Palmer. Mr. Moulton is a drug clerk for Lynde & Gould, and has had an experience of several years in school work before coming to Palmer; he has children in the schools and takes an unusual interest in school matters, having made a considerable study of them.

There will be two and possibly three candidates for town treasurer. The names of George Clough, who some time ago announced his candidacy for the position, and Samuel H. Hellyar will both be on the caucus ballot, with possibly that of George Ezekiel, who has expressed a willingness to serve the town in this capacity. The members of the license commission—W. E. McDonald, Colin Oakes and Daniel Dunn—held a meeting last evening and decided that all would be candidates for reëlection. Other candidates will be C. P. Haynes of Three Rivers, James Sullivan of Thorndike and John Fay of Palmer. In this connection the trolleymen say they do not wish to be understood as indorsing two candidates from among their number for places on this board; their candidate is Mr. Dunn, the present incumbent.

There is as yet no suggestion of names for tax collector and highway surveyor other than the present officials, J. A. Hawkes and Michael McKelligott, though what may develop in the next few days no one can foresee.

Complain of Electric Service.

Women Object to Having Through Car Held For Load of Workmen.

Complaint is made by women who have had occasion or who were compelled to take the 5 45 electric car from Springfield for Palmer, of the disagreeable conditions encountered almost every trip. It is claimed that this car—which is the last "half-hour" car running through to Palmer—is frequently held at Court Square in Springfield for several minutes after the scheduled leaving time in order to catch the employes of a certain establishment a little distance ont from Main street, they being dismissed from work just in time to catch this car—if it is held a few moments in the city These men crowd the car in large numbers; their clothes are covered with oil and the dirt and grime which their work necessitates, and it is not an unknown thing for dresses to be ruined or badly damaged by contact with them The complainants suggest that there are cars from Springfield to Ludlow—the destination of the majority of the workmen—at least once in 15 minutes, with extras at that time of the day; that the Palmer cars are intended for express passengers, and that under these conditions the street railway company has no reasonable excnse for inconveniencing its women passengers on these cars in this manner, especially when it has to delay the cars to do it. This makes the cars late into Palmer, and when it is so it frequently happens that the connecting car to the villages has gone, thus adding to the inconvenience and annoyance.

All-day Power Now

The Central Massachusetts Electric Company has repaired the breaks in its engines and is now furnishing an all-day electric lighting service as the company is furnishing all-day current and it is ready to contract for the installation of electric motors, in fact, has several which it expects to equip in a short time. As Others Claim to See Us.

Statement of Alleged Working of the Bar and Bottle Bill in Palmer.

At a hearing before the committee on liquor laws of the Legislature Wednesday on the proposed repeal of the bar and bottle bill, President James R. Nicholson of the Harvard Brewing Company made the following statement regarding the operation of the bill in Palmer, the only town in the state in which it is operative this year:

"In the town of Palmer, where this law is being tried," said Mr Nicholson, "not only has drunkenness increased and the illegal sale of liquor increased, but men who never frequented saloons before are now to be found there, and women who were previously content to remain at home and have their case of beer sent there can now be seen in the side rooms of hotels and saloons, driven there by the operation of the 'bar and bottle' bill. This law does not and will not accomplish what has been claimed for it. It has not decreased drunkenness in Worcester, where it has been tried, and it is increasing drunkenness in Palmer, where it is being tried."

As an argument the above is a crackerjack, but the important thing about this "fact" is that it isn't so. There has been no increase in drunkenness, and no one has seen in reality the flock of women at the "side doors" which Mr. Nicholson saw in his mind's eye.

So far as Palmer is concerned, the statements made are very much in the nature of a "fairy tale."

or holding company, of the various Boston consolidated lighting companies and was entirely outside of the law. This operation has been criticised ever since as a mere evasion of the state corporation laws so that the members could do things as volunteer associates which they could not do as members of a corporation They have continued outside of the law until their precedent has been followed so much and has become such a danger to the state that the time has come when the state must grapple with the evil and not permit large business to be done outside of regulative laws. This quiet report is really a business concern of the largest importance.

Of President Lincoln and the Man Who Had Saved His Life

By MILLARD MALTBIE

There are many stories in the life of Abraham Lincoln. Probably no man ever lived who was connected with more romances. But in them all there is something sad. It was a period of war in which these events of which he was the central figure occurred, and only a very few of the romances extracted from war have happy terminations. No one can look upon the portrait of Abraham Lincoln without seeing there the solemnity of those four years when the boys of '61 to '65 were being mowed down like wheat, when every family in the north and in the south were mourners.

There is one event in the life of President Lincoln which, if certain efforts that were made had been successful, would have left nonexistent his leadership in the great struggle and he would have gone down in history simply as the man whose election brought it on. True, it would have been adorned with the crown of martyrdom, but at the beginning instead of the end of his career.

This is the story of his escape from that earlier attempt to assasinate him which was a failure:

It was in the spring of 1861, when secession sympathizers were plotting against the lines of communication leading from the national capital, that a man, middle aged, muscular and with a determined though tranquil face, appeared in Perrymansville, Md. He was a Pinkerton detective and had been sent there to discover plots to damage railroad property.

When Mr. Lincoln went to Washington for his first inauguration, having passed through New York, he went southward on the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio railroads. Allan Pinkerton, chief of a Chicago detective bureau, learned through a master machinist of the latter road that a number of secessionists had bound themselves by an oath to assassinate Mr. Lincoln while journeying to the capital. There was but little time to act, for the president elect was about to leave his home. When the assassination plan was conceived it was not known by the conspirators by what route Mr. Lincoln would go to the capital. They were therefore obliged to arrange for an attack upon him at several different points. The Perrymansville branch of the organization pretended to be a cavalry company. Webster, who, though of a quiet exterior, knew how to sham very deep feeling against the Yankee government, at once enrolled himself in this cavalry company.

But getting into the company was far from getting its plans, and unfortunately there was very little time to discover them. Webster relied on his pretended hatred of the government to secure his initiation into the inner circle. His ruse succeeded. He was invited to go to the house of the captain of the company, but not to say a word about the invitation. In a room every window of which was protected against hearing and seeing from the outside he met men from the central point of the conspiracy, Baltimore, and was received as one of the planners of the work to be done.

Seated about a table, the party discussed different methods of assassinating the president elect. Webster, being a new man and of a reserved disposition, listened to the others, only occasionally pointing out some weak spot in a proposition or suggesting a way to obviate it. Before the conference broke up it had been decided to shoot Mr. Lincoln at the depot as he was passing through Baltimore on the 23d of March.

Webster now had the plans in his possession. Taking himself away from the so called cavalry company, he went where he could safely communicate with his chief, Allan Pinkerton. On the night of the 21st of February Pinkerton met Mr. Lincoln at the Continental hotel at Philadelphia and revealed the plot.

The question now arose how, having the plan, to defeat it. A ruse was adopted. Instead of going on to Washington direct, Mr. Lincoln was taken northwest to Harrisburg. But it was no easy job to turn the gaze of millions of people from the most prominent figure in the land with hosts of newspaper correspondents watching his every movement. The telegraph wires leading out of Harrisburg were secretly grounded, thus cutting off that city from the rest of the world.

Mr. Lincoln now being able to travel without news of his passage being telegraphed from every station, a private train was made up at Harrisburg, and the president elect—it is said that he was disguised—was taken back to Philadelphia and at midnight of the 22d instead of the 23d, as had been arranged, was rushed through Baltimore and early the next morning arrived safe in Washington.

This brief statement of the plan to assassinate the president elect and its defeat is essential to the story—a story of Abraham Lincoln as the central figure and Timothy Webster, whose quick work was instrumental in saving him for the great work he was to accomplish. It would have been well had the president kept Webster by him until his task having been finished, he should return to the less dangerous field of private life. But Webster could not have brooked four years of comparative idleness. Besides, there was a continued need for his services. The only railroad thoroughfare between the northern Atlantic states and the capital was continually threatened. Indeed, there was no safety on any line connecting the capital with the rest of the country. Even dispatches were not safe in transit. The first work done by Webster after foiling the intention of the Baltimore conspirators was to carry some important papers through to the president. Webster found the railroad bridges burned by the secessionists. Taking the route through Havre de Grace, where a long bridge was destroyed, he was rowed across the river and hired a wagon to take him onward. He was obliged to pass through Perrymansville, and the wagon was stopped by the cavalry company in which Webster had enlisted for a spy. He was recognized, but fortunately for him the fact that he had revealed their plot to the government was not known to them.

Webster traveled on in company with an Englishman whose confidence he won, and the man revealed to him that he was bearing dispatches to southern sympathizers in Washington. When the two reached the environs of the capital, Webster, meeting one whom he knew to be a Union man, sent word by him to the picket guard that he wished them to arrest both him and his companion. This was done, but as soon as they were separated Webster was released and went to the White House. There he was at once admitted to Mr. Lincoln and, taking off his coat and vest, ripped open the lining and produced the dispatches. They and those found on the Englishman were of vital importance. Possibly the latter were the more important, since they revealed that the president was living in a city where numbers of the enemy's sympathizers were plotting for the capture of the capital.

Webster, though he did not serve Mr. Lincoln personally, accomplished a great work for him as president. The spy played a double game. He would go south as a southern man and enter the service of the government for the purpose of giving them information of the designs of the Federal government. There he pretended to be a Federal spy when he was really a Confederate spy. He was from the first a Pinkerton detective, and when Pinkerton organized the military secret service bureau of the United States government Webster entered that service and worked for the pay he received in it. Ordinarily it is hard to tell which side a spy playing this double game is really working for. But Webster in the beginning saved the life of the president elect and continued to take him important information, while he had only to give the Confederacy information that was untrue or would not avail it.

This being a story of Mr. Lincoln rather than Webster, the many remarkable romances in the life of the latter during his term of service must be passed over without even a catalogue of them. Finally, though suffering from rheumatism, he started south in company with a Miss Lewis, who was in his confidence. The trip was to be his last incursion into the south. Unfortunately he was laid up a long while in Richmond with rheumatism. Miss Lewis nursed him During this time nothing was heard from him at Washington, and the president and others who knew of his mission became anxious about him It was determined to send the members of the secret service force south to look for him.

The two men went to Richmond They learned that Webster was lying ill at a hotel and blundered by going directly to see him without communicating with him. In his room they found a Confederate and were rash enough to hand him a letter from Allan Pinkerton which, they said, came from a friend of his in Baltimore They came again and unfortunately met an officer from the provost marshal's office This meeting led to their examination They were identified by a person who knew them, and all was lost.

When the news came to General McClellan's headquarters that the two men had been arrested as spies and had implicated Webster, Allan Pinkerton hurried to Washington to see Mr Lincoln and discover if anything could be done to save them. Singularly enough, Webster had saved Lincoln's life, and now Lincoln was called upon to save Webster's life.

Mr. Lincoln called a special meeting of the cabinet to devise means to save the spies' lives. Nothing could be done except to communicate through the secretary of war calling the attention of the authorities at Richmond the fact that the United States government had always been lenient to Confederate spies and had never tried or sentenced to death any one caught carrying information. The message closed with a threat of inaugurating a different code in future if the spies were executed.

Neither the fact pointed out nor the threat availed. Webster was hanged. Miss Lewis was imprisoned for a year, and the two men who caused the tragedy were imprisoned for twenty-two months It is not probable that they would have escaped had they not implicated Webster. But it must be remembered that they had only indirectly been spies.

The last event of similarity between Mr. Lincoln and Webster occurred three years later, when Mr. Lincoln was again the object of the assassin's bullet. The double tragedy contains two singular coincidences. Both died for the cause, though neither of them as a soldier, and both died tragic deaths, one being hanged for a spy, the other murdered.

The Doctor's Joke.

A physician who never goes out at night without leaving directions as to where to find him if wanted professionally was at a theater near Forty second street recently with a friend. Just before the curtain went up on the second act an usher handed him a note reading: "Come to the office at once. Don't telephone. Come." The note was signed by a colleague, and the doctor lost no time in obeying the peremptory summons. Arriving at his destination, he was confronted by several friends, who coolly explained that he had been used to decide a bet as to the length of time it would take to cover the distance which he had traversed. The victim's anger was only slightly appeased when he was assured that the perpetrators of the joke knew no one else who was good natured enough to furnish the information looked for.—New York Tribune.

Avoid Harsh Drugs.

Many Cathartics Tend to Cause Injury to the Bowels.

If you are subject to constipation, you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful and sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatment ever devised Our faith in it is so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely remedy constipation This preparation is called Rexall Orderlies. These are prompt, soothing and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery Their principal ingredient is odorless, tasteless and colorless. Combined with other well known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience whatever. They do not gripe, purge nor cause nausea They act without causing any pain or excessive looseness of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak, delicate persons and aged people as well as for the most hearty person.

They come in two size packages, 12 tablets 10 cents, 36 tablets 25 cents. Remember you can obtain them only at our store,—The Rexall Store. Lynde & Gould, Palmer.

Basketball Team Falls to Show Up.

For the second time this season a large crowd, which filled Memorial Hall to witness a basketball game Tuesday evening, were keenly disappointed, the Quiet Five of Holyoke failing to show up. A telephone call was received at 8 15 from the manager of the Quiet Five, stating that they were in Ludlow, where a tire had blown out on the automobile in which they were traveling and that they would be in Monson ready for the play at 9 15 o'clock. Again at 9 45 a message was received that they were then in Indian Orchard and were unable to get to Monson that evening. This was to have been the last game of the season, and the management of the Monson team is exceedingly sorry to have had such a thing occur. In the future any Holyoke team will have a hard time to schedule a game with the local team, as both of those which disappointed the local teams and the fans were from Holyoke.

The Academy basketball team, in one of the hardest contested games ever played on Holmes gymnasium floor, were forced to be contented Saturday with the smaller end of a 22 to 14 score. Wesleyan Academy, their old time rivals, were the visitors. Although Monson outpassed and outplayed the Wesleyan team, they could not locate the basket, either from the floor or on free tries, Capt. Dunsford being unable to locate the hoop once in eleven free tries from the fifteen foot mark. The Monson team made 37 attempts at their basket in the first half and succeeded in getting but three baskets. The Wesleyan team shot 17 times in the first half which ended 13 to 6 in Wesleyan's favor. In the second half the playing was even closer and more exciting then in the first half. For Wesleyan, Fountain and Mackenzie were the stars, and for Monson the work of Hopper, who held Pickles the Wesleyan captain, to one basket, was easily the star of the home team. Capt. Dunsford also played a fast game.

The Young French Girl.

A young French girl enters the theater with her father. She takes her seat directly in front of the privileged American girls "finishing" their education. Her untouched flowerlike face is alight with anticipated pleasure, with a soft vividness of intelligence that could never be cursed with the word "brainy." Her hair is bound with a little old fashioned snood and tiny buckle; a strangely simple evening dress covers the exquisite ardor of her slender body. Quickly four faces, the faces of the overindulged, the overprecocious, the overathletic and the overdressed, turn to study her. There is something to learn in this little French maid, whose eyes never meet a man's, who is never allowed to walk alone on the street, whose unconscious grace envelops her like a veil, who is sheltered like a delicate bird, yet trained to the utmost energy, reserve, accomplishment and usefulness.—Atlantic.

Wall Street Superstition.

Almost all the Wall street speculators are superstitious fellows who believe in charms and amulets. In their pockets they carry lucky coins, a rabbit's foot, a horse chestnut or something of the kind. One Wall street man, much envied by his companions, has a short piece of a hangman's rope to conjure with. Many of the customers in the offices are even more credulous than the professional traders in their belief in signs and omens. There is a deep seated tradition that Tuesday is "low day" in a "bull market" and "high day" in a "bear market." Some persons speculate on "systems," and others employ "charts." Once they exploited a machine in Wall street known as a "market register." It was about as effective as helping anybody to win at Stock Exchange speculation as it is to rub up against a hunchback for luck just before you bet on a horse race.—Munsey's Magazine.

He Got Valuable Information.

The story is told of the times of Aretas Blood and the old Manchester locomotive works that a student came to Mr. Blood once and wanted to study the business of locomotive building in his vacation days. The student came well recommended, and Mr. Blood, who never had much use for these "tech" people, sent him down to the boiler shop and placed him in charge of the old foreman. The old man took the "tech" man around, and in the course of the inspection of the shop they came across one boiler on the inside of which was a man at work.

"Oh," said the venerable pilot, "he doesn't get out. We always count upon losing at least one man in building a boiler."—Manchester Union.

THE TWO DETECTIVES

By WARREN GRANT FOX

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I was sitting in a railway station waiting for a train. A man sat near me, but I didn't look at him. All I remembered afterward was that he was a man. Presently I turned and saw on the seat where he had been a rectangular package. I looked about for its owner, but could see no one who appeared to have missed it. I took it up, not doubting for a moment that the person who had left it would come back for it. But although I remained there some time no one came. Then I opened the package, which proved to be a box containing jewels. It was plain to me that they were of considerable value.

While I was looking at them two men came up to me. Seeing them approach, I closed the box, but they told me to open it, and as soon as they saw its contents congratulated each other on finding, as they expressed it, the "Huntington jewels." They believed the story I told them of how I had come into their possession, "for," they said, "the man who has stolen them would not be examining them in a public place." They had received orders to watch this station for the thief, and he, doubtless suspecting that he would not be permitted to leave it without being searched, in order to avoid being caught with the plunder on him had left it on the seat.

"Let us act like friends met by chance," said one of them, "for the fellow is doubtless watching us, his intention being to shadow you and trick you out of them."

So I put the box in my pocket, and the two men went away. I remained a few minutes longer, then left the station and went home. I was quite sure I was followed not only by the thief, but by the two detectives, but whether the former knew anything about the latter I did not know. I had not been at home ten minutes when there was a ring at my doorbell and the detectives entered.

"Well," said the spokesman, "I think we may at once turn in the jewels. The thief doubtless has marked your house and will try, either by diplomacy or stealth, to get possession of them. You'd better be prepared for him tonight; he may break in to your house and try to get them by force."

"I'm always prepared for such things," I replied, and, pulling out a drawer from a cabinet, I took up a six shooter.

"Good for you," said one of the men. "I don't think any one breaking into your house will get much. Let me have the jewels. I'll take them to the police station, and if you'll call tomorrow I dare say you'll be paid a handsome reward by the owner."

"All right," I replied, "but you must give me some evidence that you're authorized to receive them."

"Authorized!" exclaimed the spokesman. "We have found you in possession of the property, and it's our duty to run you in with the jewels. But you've told so straight a story that we don't wish to inconvenience you. If you don't give up the stolen goods we'll have to take you along."

"I'll go with you willingly," I said.

For the first time a suspicion came to me that possibly these detectives might put me in a hole. When I said that I would go willingly they gave each other a look. It seemed to me that they didn't wish me to go with them; they preferred to take the gems themselves. They went into another room for consultation. This proved to me conclusively that they were not detectives, but very likely had themselves stolen the jewels, that they had feared arrest and had taken this method of getting their plunder out of the station. When they returned I had slipped the revolver up my sleeve. One of them stepped to the telephone and called for a carriage.

Now, if he had called for a police patrol wagon I should have known that he was a bona fide officer. As it was, I knew he wasn't; that they were going to pretend to take me in a carriage to a station, but really to secure the jewels on the way.

When the carriage arrived I had backed into a corner. They told me to come with them, but instead of doing so I shouted "Hands up!" and pointed my weapon toward them. Fortunately they were very near together and I could cover both at one time. One of them put his hands up at once, but the other made a move of his hand to his hip. I shivered the hand with a bullet, and the bloody hand went up immediately. Then, backing to the telephone, I held both men in position while I called up the police.

My two detectives were in a box. I could kill them if they moved, and if they didn't make a move to get away they would go to the penitentiary. But it was with them a choice between death and prison, and they chose prison. In a few minutes a patrol wagon dashed up to the house and several policemen, carrying cocked revolvers, came in.

"Hello, Tom Dugan!" said the sergeant in command. "Caught again! And you, Pete Miller! I thought you were working the west."

I had captured the Huntington jewels.

But this wasn't all. The property was worth a hundred thousand dollars, and there was a reward offered of ten thousand. This reward, with a bonus, was paid me, for I had risked my life in retaining them.

Freed His Mind in His Will.

Among curious wills that of a certain Dr. Dunlap, a Canadian, has often been quoted. It probably contained some of the most maliciously expressed bequests on record. To one brother the doctor left his books so that he might learn to read and acquire common sense. To another brother he left his big silver watch that the said brother might know the hour at which men ought to get up of a morning. To his brother-in-law he left his best pipe "in gratitude that he married my sister Maggie, whom no man of taste would ever have taken," and to the eldest son of a friend he left a silver taukard lest if he left it to the friend himself, who was a rabid teetotaler, the latter might melt it down to cast temperance medals. To one of his sisters he left a silver drink cup "for reasons best known to herself;" to another the family Bible, so that she might learn as much of its spirit as she already knew of its letter and become a better Christian, and to his eldest sister a five acre field to console her for being married to a man that she had to henpeck.—Chambers' Journal.

A Pair of Cheerful Liars.

The crowd in the little country store was watching the rain when Deacon Witherspoon remarked that he'd seen it rain about as hard as anybody ever had seen it rain. Somebody said:

"Deacon, how hard did you ever see it rain?"

"Well, sir," said the deacon, "once upon a time, when I was at home, we had an old cider barrel laying out in the yard with both ends out and the bunghole up, and, would you believe it, it rained so hard into that bunghole that water couldn't run out of both ends fast enough, and it swelled up and busted!"

Then Reuben Henry spoke up. He said he'd never seen it rain very hard, but he'd seen some mighty cold weather. Somebody said, "Rube, how cold did you ever see it get?"

He said, "Well, sir, one time when I was living down in Pickaway county, in hog killing time, we had a kettle of boiling water setting on the stove, and we took it out in the yard, and it froze so doggone quick the ice was hot."—National Monthly.

The Reward

She Received For Bringing Washington Information

By MAY C. ETHEREDGE

Copyright by American Press Association 1911.

When Washington was at Cambridge in command of the patriot army holding the British shut up in Boston it was his object to capture them if he could, if not to force them out. He sent a spy into the city to learn of their strength and condition.

The young man selected for this work was Joel Armstrong, twenty-two years old, who a few days before had left Boston to join the army at Cambridge on the eve of his betrothal to Sally Perkins.

Washington instructed him to discover just what supplies and ammunition the British possessed. The general knew the numbers and armament.

It is not far from Cambridge to Boston; indeed, they are now one city. Joel had no need to fear being taken in citizen's dress, for he had no uniform. He had always lived in Boston and knew all routes between it and its environs. He went through in the night, and in the morning when Sally had just lighted the fire in the kitchen and was swinging the crane bearing the pot to boil the water he walked in, and they were locked in each other's arms.

There was no great danger to Joel in going about the city so long as he was not liable to be caught with information on his person. The American army was considered by the British rather as a rabble than an organized force, and transitory at that. Joel collected all the information he wanted from patriot citizens who knew very well how General Howe was situated. But he did not dare trust to his memory. Besides, certain citizens were desirous of sending communications to Washington informing him of various matters important for him to know. Joel took all these letters and papers to Sally and asked her to sew them in the lining of his coat.

Now, it so happened that a British soldier whom Joel had known and had told that he was going to Cambridge to fight against the tyrant king saw Joel walking past Faneuil hall. This soldier saw the young patriot go into the house where Sally Perkins lived and told his captain of the circumstances. The captain told his colonel, and a guard was sent to the house to prevent Joel's going back to the American army, lest he carry information.

It so happened that Sally was sewing the papers in Joel's coat when, looking out through a window from which she could see some distance down the street, she spied a squad of soldiers coming, the officer making inquiries as he came. She also saw a citizen point to her home. Quick as a flash she inferred that Joel was in danger. Pulling a huge chest out from under a bed, she put her lover into it and shoved it back as the soldiers stopped before the house and surrounded it. An officer walked in without knocking and found Sally at her spinning wheel.

Joel was not discovered, but the guard remained outside on watch so that if he were still there he could not leave. Sally told Joel of the situation, and he was much chagrined that he could not deliver the information he possessed to General Washington.

"I suppose I shall have to burn it all," he said.

"How would it do for me to take it?" Sally asked.

"Do you think you could?"

"Of course."

So Joel transferred the papers to Sally, who concealed them about her person and walked out of the house in face of the guard. The officer looked dubious about letting her go, since he had received orders to permit no one to leave the house. But Sally paid no attention to him, though her heart was beating like a trip hammer.

Sally, fearing she might be followed, went among the shops making purchases. She saw a redcoat following her, but managed to elude him. When it was quite dark she started for Cambridge, keeping to the fields. Finding a boat on the Charles river, she appropriated it and, rowing across, was taken in by an American sentry. She asked to be conducted to the commander in chief.

Washington was conferring with people who called to see him on innumerable subjects when a sentry announced Sally Perkins.

"What can I do for you, Mistress Perkins?" asked the general.

"Nothing, general. I am doing something for you. You sent Joel Armstrong, a soldier in your army, to Boston for information. He is shut up there and cannot leave for the redcoats who are watching the house. Here is what he collected for you."

The general's face lighted at seeing the papers He took them and, having glanced at them, said:

"We are under obligations to you, Mistress Perkins, for these papers, which are of great value to us. What can I do in recognition of our appreciation of your heroic act? Is there anything I can give you?"

"Yes, general, a kiss. I would like to be able to say that I have kissed the commander in chief."

Washington, though he was old enough to be the girl's father, colored slightly. He was so dignified as well as modest that this reward given before a dozen persons was a great trial to him. He submitted to be kissed on the cheek by the girl, then said:

"Now that this worthless reward has been given you must go and have something of value—a supper."

Joel Armstrong remained hidden till Boston was evacuated.

A Pithy Sermon.

Here is the pithiest sermon ever preached: "Our ingress into life is naked and bare, our progress through life is trouble and care, our egress out of it we know not where; but, doing well here, we shall do well there. I could not tell more by preaching a year."

His Line.

A charming young member of a woman's literary club, who adds the distinction of being a bride to successful authorship, recently met a gushing stranger at a club reception.

"Oh, Mrs. Blank, I am so glad to meet you. I enjoy your stories so much, and your husband's too." Then adding as an afterthought, "He is literary, too, isn't he?"

"Thank heaven, no!" replied the bride. "He's in the coal business."—New York Press.

"Her teeth are like stars," gushed the love-smitten youth, in an outburst of joyous delight; and when they were married he found 'twas the truth — like the stars, they came out every night. — Life.

DEATH OF FORMER PASTOR.

Rev. John A. Bowler Passed Away Tuesday at Home in Springfield

Rev. John A. Bowler, whose death occurred Tuesday in Springfield, was formerly a much loved pastor in the Methodist church in this village. Dr. Bowler, besides being a minister for about 30 years, was well known as a lecturer, his "chalk talk" addresses in which his skill as an artist was shown being popular among the Y. M. C A.'s of this section, also at the camp meetings at Sterling and at various other gatherings He had much ability as an artist and was able to adapt his subject and drawings so that they proved very interesting to an audience of boys as well as an audience of grown people.

DODGING THE LAW

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Josephus Henderson was a man of forty when a startling event took place in his life. He was also a widower. He was exactly five feet high and weighed 110 pounds. These figures will convince you that Josephus was not numbered among the mighty men of earth. He had tried various ways of making a living, and in pursuing them he had got the reputation of being keen. He had at last turned peddler and was driving a horse and wagon around the country with dry goods, notions, groceries and tinware. That's the way he came to meet the widow Sopher, who lived on a farm.

The widow had passed forty. She was large and bony and strong. She was not handsome. The only thing on earth she feared was the law. She had once been arrested for kicking a man and had spent ten days in jail. The sheriff had made her stay as pleasant as possible, but she had never recovered from the shock.

Peddlers are a jovial lot, and so are widows, and in time these two came to call each other Josh and Sally.

Things would have gone no farther but for the little man's keenness. He never made a sale to the widow without cheating her, and one day when he heard that she had come into possession of $5,000 in cash through the death of a brother Josephus saw his way clear for the future. That money would set up a store in the village, and he would become a thriving merchant.

Josephus went courting. He found the widow behind the plow in a field. As he courted she plowed. He had no objections, as time was money to both of them. Josephus confessed that he had entertained a sneaking affection for the widow since his first call, and, though she didn't say much, she seemed pleased.

Josephus was told to call two weeks later, but at the end of nine days he was back again. He said it was his beating heart that fetched him. He had cut the time down, but the widow was ready for him. Several days previous she had gone to the village and paid a lawyer $5 to answer the question:

"Can the law trouble a wife who licks her husband?"

And his answer had been:

"Not if you do not lick him too hard. There is neither assault nor battery in what may be called a moderate licking. Don't break any bones and don't seriously injure his eyes."

"I have been thinking," said the widow to Josephus; "I have been thinking and wondering if you loved me."

"Heavens, can you doubt it?" he exclaimed.

"And you will always love me?"

"Forever and forever!"

"Then we'll say two months hence."

"One month—a week—a day!"

Josephus knew of a store to rent in the village, and he wanted that $5,000. The widow insisted that she must have two weeks at the very shortest, and a date was settled on. The marriage was to be private and be celebrated in her home. In due time the happy day came round—a preacher and two witnesses and the deed was done. An hour later, as the happy couple were left alone, the widow changed her dress, rolled up her sleeves and brought out a new horsewhip bought for the occasion.

"What's up?" asked the wondering Josephus.

"Take off your coat and stand out."

"For what, love? I want to talk with you about opening a store in town."

"Plenty of time for that, Josephus. The first sale you made to me was five yards of roller toweling. You beat me on the price and on the measure. I'm going to tan your jacket for it!"

"But, love"—

She took him by the collar and laid on the whip till he hollered. A woman who could twist a plow around in clay soil could handle the little Josephus.

"The second sale," continued the wife as she rested, "was five tin pans. Four of them leaked, and you beat me out of 10 cents beside. Here is licking No. 2."

"But I am your dear husband!" he protested as he squirmed about.

"And that's why I can lick you and dodge the law. Here goes!"

Josephus' hide was tickled again. He attempted to fight, but was taken by the hair and his head banged against the wall till he grew quiet. When the performance was over and the wife had got her breath she said:

"You sold me ten yards of calico for a dress and warranted it to wash. It was three-quarters of a yard short on the measure and the colors ran into each other. Josephus, some more horsewhip!"

"I'll have you arrested for this!"

"You can't. That's what I paid $5 to make sure of. Come to time!"

And Josephus was licked for selling short weight groceries, and for charging 50 cents too much for a pair of shoes, and for selling black stockings that crocked, and when he had got his last stroke the wife said:

"Josephus, darling, it was a cousin of mine that got the $5,000, but you've got me, and here we dwell, and you do the farm work and do it well or you'll get some more of this! The mercantile business is not for us, dear. What we want is the free air of the country, with honest prices and good measure thrown in!"

The End of His Rope

A Story of a Fortune Hunter In the Swiss Alps

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Interlaken, in the Swiss Alps, is a central point for tourists for making excursions either into the neighboring valleys or on to the mountains. The town, which is simply a cluster of hotels with a casino, is built on a plain between two lakes, deriving its name from its location, each lake about ten or a dozen miles long and about a mile wide. To the south of these lakes rise the peaks of the Bernese Alps—the Eiger, Jungfrau, Monch and others. From Interlaken a cog railway carries tourists up steep inclines to Grindelwald, Scheidlg, and thence down to Lauterbrunnen. From Lauterbrunnen one may be swung up by cable several thousand feet to Murren, where a near view can be obtained of the surrounding group of mountains.

One summer some tourists started on the cog railway for Scheidlg, from whence the men of the party intended to attempt to climb the Jungfrau. The cog railway now extends farther up the mountain, but at that time one could travel by rail no further than Scheidlg. In this party were Miss Delia Denton of New York and Mr. Archie Pendleton of Chicago. Miss Denton was an heiress, while Mr. Pendleton was a young lawyer of moderate means who had but recently been admitted to the bar.

Touring in Europe affords every facility for lovemaking, and Pendleton had availed himself of the opportunity to woo Miss Denton. He seemed about to secure the prize when a young Britisher, heir to an earldom, came upon the scene, and it became a tie between him and the American. Pendleton had the mortification and disappointment to see his suit held up by nothing more or less than a title. Worse than this, from the time Lord Boyingham entered the contest for Miss Denton's hand he treated the Chicagoan with that towering superiority which has made John Bull unpopular with all other races.

There are hotels at Scheidlg, and it had been arranged that the ladies of the party should put up at one of them while the men made the attempt upon the mountain. There were three men intending to go up, but one of them, becoming fearful of his heart's action in the thin air even at Scheidlg, decided not to risk a higher altitude. This left Boyingham and Pendleton the only ones to go except the guides. There were two guides, armed with axes and alpenstocks, one for each end of the little procession.

When the party left their friends standing on the porch of the hotel both Boyingham and Pendleton looked back at Miss Denton, each for a goodby. Boyingham was elated, Pendleton depressed, for the smile she bestowed on the former had an evident meaning in it, while the one she gave Pendleton conveyed nothing more than good will. The men moved off, encouraged by a cheer from those who remained, and were soon lost by a turn in their path taking them around the side of the first mountain.

It was 10 o'clock when the climbers started, and the day was fine. Through a telescope on the porch they were watched, being occasionally seen like a dotted line far up on the mountain side. About noon the weather began to thicken, with frequent snow flurries, and they were visible no longer.

It was nearly night when two of the party, Lord Boyingham and one of the guides, Hans Dyckman, returned, their blanched faces and agitation denoting there had been an accident.

"Where are the others?" asked a clamor of voices in tones of dread.

"Lost, I fear," said Boyingham.

At that moment Delia Denton joined those about the returned climbers and, hearing Boyingham's words, staggered.

"What has happened?" asked all at once.

"Tell them, Hans," said Boyingham.

"The snow covered our way," said Hans, "and getting on was difficult. We were crossing a ridge. Brouwer was in advance, with Mr. Pendleton next, his lordship third and I fourth, all bound together by the rope. Brouwer and Mr. Pendleton had crossed and were cutting steps in the ice on the other side. Something, we know not what, gave way on the other side, and we felt a jerk on the rope. It had broken between Brouwer and Mr. Pendleton. His lordship was on the edge of the divide. Presently there was another jerk. Mr. Pendleton went down, and his lordship fell back, I catching him in my arms."

"But the others!" exclaimed the excited listeners. "How far did they fall? Were they killed?"

"That we don't know," replied the guide. "It was snowing, and we could not see a dozen yards. We concluded to return for ropes, go back and as soon as it is light tomorrow make an investigation. They have provisions and flasks of liquor, and if they are not killed we may save them."

At this moment the landlord took up the end of the rope that had been severed between Boyingham and Pendleton and scrutinized it. Presently he dropped it and went away.

"Why did you examine that rope?" asked a guest.

"To see if it had been broken."

"Well?"

"It was broken. The end was frayed."

About midnight a party, provided with such paraphernalia as were necessary to their purpose, made ready to start in quest of the missing guide and Pendleton. Lord Boyingham declared that there was no use in attempting to reach them; that he had looked down into a crevasse several hundred feet deep, into which he was sure they had fallen. He declined to go back with the party, making an excuse that he had been so "cut up" by the accident and the loss of the two men that he would be of no use in the rescue. Since no one was wanted in the party who could not assist it was deemed best for him to remain in the hotel.

The party started about 1 o'clock. They could travel over a known path till nearly dawn, which would bring them near the scene of the accident as soon as it was light enough to see to what depths the men had fallen. Fortunately the weather had changed, and shortly after 2 o'clock a gray streak appeared in the cloudless east. The party consisted of a Mr. Bowers, an American stopping at the hotel where the excursionists had put up, two porters and Dyckman leading the way.

About half past 2 they reached the ridge where the accident had occurred, and Bowers, taking the advance, climbed it, sitting on it with a leg on either side. Looking down, he saw that the tourists must have fallen into a gap, but how deep it was he could not tell. The rest of the party, being informed of what he was about to do, all advanced, he descending to an icy ledge not far below. The men in falling must have struck this ledge and, unable to stop themselves, had slid into the gap.

When all had crossed the last man threw the coils of rope over to them, and Bowers volunteered to be lowered to discover whether the men could be found and whether they were dead or alive. A rope was placed around his body, and, a code of signals having been arranged, he was let down. When he had gone some forty feet, the rope slackening, it was evident that he had struck bottom. He was then heard to call, and a faint response came up. He signaled to be raised and, reaching the party, said that the gap was filled with soft snow; that he had called and received an answer. When being raised he looked for the owner of the voice and saw him some fifty feet away. The point from which he had been lowered being altered to meet the new conditions, he went down again with another rope. Presently a signal was given on each of these ropes, and Bowers and Brouwer were both hauled up. Brouwer was well nigh gone, but was able to point out where Pendleton could be found, the two having conversed after their fall.

Bowers again went down with an extra rope and struck Pendleton lying apparently unconscious, though if Bowers had not been immediately over him he would not have seen him, so deeply buried was he in the snow. Then Bowers and Pendleton were both drawn up, Pendleton showing no sign of life. But glass being placed over his mouth showed moisture, and the party, going to work on him with a will, pouring down liquor at the same time, finally revived him.

Neither of the men had been injured by their fall into the snow. They were on the eve of perishing by cold. As soon as they were able to proceed the party descended to Scheidlg.

Great was the rejoicing at the hotel when the two men who had been considered lost appeared walking with their rescuers down the mountain. When they came up to the porch it was crowded with people cheering and waving to them. Then some one asked, "Where's Lord Boyingham?" An attendant replied: "His lordship went down to Interlaken an hour ago. He received a telegram calling him away."

The meeting between Pendleton and Delia Denton was far different from their parting. The title that had tempted her had shriveled since it must be taken with a man who was at once dishonorable and a coward. Not only that, but the accident had revealed to her her own heart. The belief that Pendleton had been killed gave her a shock that surprised her. One glance from Pendleton at the woman he loved told him that he had won.

When something of the excitement had subsided the landlord asked Pendleton to come into a private room. The rope with which the climber had started the day before was still about his waist. The landlord took up the end and, looking at it, threw it from him.

"What is it?" asked Pendleton.

"It was cut," was the reply in a seething tone. "The dog feared you would drag him over and cut you off. Before his return he frayed the edge by rubbing it between stones."

"His lordship wrote a telegram to himself stating that his mother was dying. He did it for an excuse to get away and left before your return. He dared not face your end of the rope."

"Keep it to yourself," said Pendleton after a moment's thought.

Pendleton kept the secret till a few years later, when he heard the Britisher was trying again to marry an American fortune, when he sent his lordship an order to keep off, an order that was speedily obeyed.

Delia Denton did not know the secret till she had been Mrs. Pendleton several years.

Sharp and Bright!

Two street urchins were arguing about the high cost of living or something at Sixth and Sansom streets, and soon logic was exhausted and they began to call names.

"You're a bonehead!" one grimy kid informed the other.

"G'wan. I'm so sharp me old man tried to lick me the other day and cut his hand. You're the lowbrow of the party."

"Is that so? Well, if you want to know anything, I'm so bright my mother calls me sun."—Philadelphia Times.

"Lame Leg Well"

"I wish to say that I have used Sloan's Liniment on a lame leg that has given me much trouble for six months. It was so bad that I couldn't walk sometimes for a week. I tried doctors' medicine and had a rubber bandage for my leg, and bought everything that I heard of, but they all did me no good, until at last I was persuaded to try Sloan's Liniment. The first application helped it, and in two weeks my leg was well."—A. L. HUNTER, of Hunter, Ala.

The Burglar's Prayer.

Sir Herbert Risley, speaking of the castes of eastern Bengal at a meeting of the Royal Anthropological Institute, said a curious system of religious worship prevailed among a caste who were professional burglars. They made a space in the ground, and a man then cut his arm and prayed to one of the earth gods that there might be a dark night and that he might succeed in obtaining great booty and escape capture.—London Standard.

OTTUMWA WOMAN CURED

Household Hints.

SALMON LOAF.

Drain a one-pound can of salmon and save the liquor. Chop the fish fine, add one-quarter cup of soft butter, four well beaten eggs, one-half level teaspoon of salt, one-half cup of fine bread crumbs, one-half level tablespoon of parsley chopped very fine and one-eighth teaspoon of pepper. Stir all well together and put into a buttered mold; steam one hour.

Make a sauce as follows: Melt two level tablespoons of butter, add an equal amount of flour, a few grains each of mace and cayenne, one cup of hot milk and the salmon liquor. When it has cooked smooth stir in a beaten egg. Unmold the salmon loaf and serve with the sauce. Garnished with parsley this makes a handsome luncheon dish. If cracker crumbs are used the loaf will be dry; it should be soft and but just firm enough to hold together.

Fish must be taken at once from the can when opened because a poisonous change takes place rapidly after the fish and tin are exposed to the air. Take care to remove the little bones which break up with the fish, and use only the best brands of canned fish. Canned salmon is used largely, as it is excellent merely heated and served as boiled fish and makes a good salad and other dishes.

What offers a better chance to the man of means than a strongly secured investment of this kind? In what better way can a young man or woman, now in prosperous circumstances, prepare for the future and old age, when perhaps an annuity will be needed, or how can parents more easily provide for their children's future than to buy for them orchard tracts which after five years will bring steady incomes and independence for life. CHARGED WITH BURNING.

Louis Tallant Arrested For Dry Goods Store Fire.

ALLEGED ACCESSORY BEFORE FACT.

Lonis Tallant of Springfield was arrested in Palmer last Saturday afternoon on a charge of being an accessory before the fact in burning a stock of goods with intent to defraud an insurance company. He secured bail and was released until Monday morning, when he pleaded not guilty in the district court and the case was continued until Saturday of next week for a hearing. Bonds in the sum of $1000 were required and furnished.

Tallant is alleged to be the owner of a stock of women's waists and other wearing apparel with which a store was opened recently in the small building on Church street used formerly as the bakery salesroom. Samuel Green was employed as manager. Tallant claims that his agreement with Green was that the latter should spend three days a week in the store and the other three days on the road. On the night of Feb 18 fire was discovered in the building about 11 30. The firemen discovered a peculiar condition on arriving at the scene. The blaze seemed to be all over the room and not confined to any one spot; neither could it be determined that the fire had started in any one spot, although the only apparently possible source was a stove in which there was a fire. The firemen confined the blaze to the building and extinguished it before the stock had been destroyed, although it was badly damaged by fire and water. Green had left the store in time to take the 11 15 electric car to Springfield, and claimed that everything was all right when he left the building.

The stock was insured for $1800 in the Sun Insurance Company of London, through F. M. Ralton of Palmer. Tallant came to Palmer one day last week and made affidavit of his loss. He came again on Saturday and was arrested by Officer Crimmins. When taken into custody he claimed to know of no reason for his arrest.

Aged Brimfield Woman Dead.

Mrs. Rebecca Lincoln, 82, Widow of Capt. James Lincoln, Yesterday.

Mrs. Rebecca Lincoln, 82, widow of the late Capt. Francis D. Lincoln of Brimfield, died at the home of her grandson, Charles L. Peirce, in Springfield early yesterday morning. Mrs. Lincoln and Miss Lincoln had closed their house in Brimfield for the winter and had been in Springfield since Thanksgiving. Mrs. Lincoln had been in good health this winter and was looking forward to her return to Brimfield, when stricken with an attack of heart trouble and only lived 36 hours.

Mrs. Lincoln was Miss Rebecca F. Cox, and was born in Walpole June 16, 1828. She was married to Francis Danielson Lincoln of Brimfield September 28, 1848, and their early married life was spent in Wolpole, after which they moved to the Lincoln Homestead in Brimfield, which was originally that of Mr. Lincoln's grandfather, Gen. Timothy Danielson, a leader in the section in the Revolutionary period. Two daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, Rebecca M. and Henrietta F. The latter became the wife of the late Rev. Webster K. Peirce during the early part of his pastorate of nearly 25 years in Brimfield. Mr. Lincoln, who was captain of Co. G, of the 46th regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, died May 8, 1901, and Mrs. Peirce died January 18, 1902, leaving two sons.

Besides her daughter, Miss Rebecca, Mrs. Lincoln leaves a sister, Miss Emily Cox of Mattapan, two grandsons, Francis Lincoln Peirce of Newtonville and Charles Lincoln Peirce of Springfield, and a great-grandson, Ronald Webster Lincoln Peirce of Springfield. The funeral will be held at the late home in Brimfield to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

WAGON STRUCK BY TRAIN.

Vehicle Smashed But Man Not Seriously Hurt.

A NARROW ESCAPE AT BONDSVILLE.

Patrick Fitzgerald of Bondsville, of the firm of Hastings & Fitzgerald, dealers in meats and provisions, was struck by a train on the track of the Athol railroad in that village Tuesday morning. The cart in which he was riding was demolished, and Mr. Fitzgerald was slightly hurt on his right side and arm, but was able to be about again in a day or two; the horse escaped injury.

Mr. Fitzgerald left his place of business about 8 30, to make the usual round with his cart, a covered one of the usual market variety. While crossing the railroad track near the residence of George Canterbury the cart was struck by the 8 30 train, which was traveling at a rapid rate. Mr. Fitzgerald neither saw nor heard the train until he was struck. How he managed to escape injury, if not death, in the general destruction of the cart, is little short of a miracle.

Surprised on Their Wedding Anniversary.

Doings of the Legislature.

Alarming Fruit Tree Situation—Fight For Pure Milk—Biennial Elections—Attacks on Civil Service System—Veto Overridden.

BOSTON, March 8, 1911.

Every person in Massachusetts who is interested in trees, especially fruit trees, has a concern in the testimony presented to the committee on agriculture Tuesday forenoon by W. H. Wyman, president of the Massachusetts nurserymen's association. He was corroborated by Dr. Henry T. Fernald of the agricultural college, the state nursery inspector. It was really an alarming situation which was put before the public. Not only are the gypsy and brown tail moths increasing, but there are untold perils threatening the state all the time from importations of nursery stock from abroad. Plenty of other nursery experts corroborated their statements. Gypsy moths were said to have "increased" in Worcester county during the last year, while the brown tails were said to have "increased ten-fold" in Worcester county during the last year. These moths fly, which the gypsies do not, and hence can spread much faster. But they winter on the ends of twigs and so are easily destroyed, compared with the gypsies. I had a talk after the hearing with State Forester Rane and he admitted that the statements regarding Worcester county are true and said that it is highly important to head off these pests before they go further west, as they are doing all the time. As to the foreign importations, it was said that the gypsy and brown tails came from Europe, and the San Jose scale from China, and that there are numerous other dangerous pests which are liable to be brought from those countries. In their native state, nature has established its balance by means of parasites, and holds these scourges in check. But in this country the balance of species has not been established. It was represented that possibly the combination of gypsy and brown tails and San Jose scale is not a circumstance to what we may see in way of forest and fruit devastation unless we keep a sharper eye on our imports from Europe and Asia. Dr. Fernald told of his discovering, almost by accident, some highly dangerous foreign insects on an importation which had not been distributed. It was a wonder, he said that we had not been overrun by them. Congress is indifferent until the cry of great present danger is raised, and will not make sufficient appropriation to cover the case of the imported nursery stock. All the speakers urged the committee to report a bill carrying a larger appropriation for nursery inspection and for the employment of additional deputy inspectors. There are some 125 to 150 nurseries in the state. The recent development of fruit raising in this state and all New England has made our farmers the best customers for nursery stock in the United States, and there is constant danger that our orchards will be invaded by dangerous insects from other states.

A hotter fight is on the boards for clean milk than ever before. Last session the milk issue was foremost because of the agitation by the farmers, who said that they were losing money. Then followed the railroad rate incident, well remembered. But this year the combat is pushed by the Massachusetts milk consumers' association, in behalf of the lives of thousands of infants and of the general milk consuming public, and the cooperation of the producers is asked in reciprocity for last year's assistance. There are a lot of honorary officers of the association, from the honorary president, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, lately deceased, to a long list of vice presidents, including the former president of Harvard, the presidents of Amherst and Williams, the archbishop of Boston, and many others of that class, reinforced by a consulting medical committee, counsel and assistant counsel, an executive committee and treasurer. The man who does most of the work at the state house is Former Representative Myron E. Pierce of Boston, the assistant counsel. There is just distributed to-day a thick pamphlet prepared by him, full of the strongest possible array of facts and arguments for the pure milk bill. Now the real fight in this case comes over the provision of the bill that the main control of the inspection of dairies is to be in the control of the state board of health, while the milk producers want it in the control of the state board of agriculture. The pamphlet insists upon the vital consequence to the life and health of the public that the milk supply shall be thoroughly inspected. The farmers want no overzealous theorist around their stables, but rather practical men such as the state board of agriculture would presumably employ. One of the points is this: "More unnecessary deaths and diseases are associated with dirty milk than with any other article of food." The high infant mortality in summer "is largely due to bacteria and their poisons in dirty milk." The array of medical authority in support of this proposition is formidable. On the other hand stands the large decline in the production of milk because it does not pay.

A week ago the committee on constitutional amendments assigned the hearing on the two propositions (one a bill and the other an amendment in due form) for biennial state elections. Representative Langtry of Springfield, author of the amendment, spoke briefly for it, and then, for lack of proper notice, the hearing was continued to to-day, several remonstrants being present. To-day no one appeared for the amendment. The opposition was represented by Gamaliel Bradford, E. Gerry Brown, John Weaver Sherman, chairman of the legislative committee of the state branch of the American Federation of Labor, and Former Senator James S. Allen. Whatever may be the personal opinions of the committee, the fact that in 1896 one of the biennial amendments was defeated by over 45,000 and the other by over 50,000 in addition to the much stronger tendency now to keep the government close to the people, made the few of the committee who heard the case feel that there were plenty of more important popular questions to be put before the voters to-day.

Probably there is no connection between the increased Democratic representation in the Legislature and the increased number of attacks upon the civil service system, but there are more hostile moves this year than usual. One bill, now in the Senate calendar, reported favorably from the public service committee, puts it into the hands of the local authorities to say what shall be the requirements of height and weight for members of regular fire department. The passage of such a bill would be simply a breach in the merit system,—for such requirements come in as a part of the qualifications for the office.

Gov. Foss has been simply snowed under by House and Senate on the matter of the bill which prevented the asking of questions of applicants for civil service positions as to whether they had been arrested before the age of 16 years. The House vote of 155 to 51 and six pairs, last Friday, has been more than matched this afternoon by the Senate vote of 31 yeas to five nays. Senator Greenwood of Worcester was the only one who spoke for the veto. The five who stood with the governor were Senators Greenwood of Worcester, Mulligan of Middlesex, Pearson of Norfolk, Stearns of Middlesex and White of the Cape. There was a report that President Treadway had asked to be recorded against the veto, but this is not so. Evidently there has been a change of sentiment on the part of some of the senators and the current ran so strongly against the governor that they changed sides. One of the senators left with me a memorandum saying that he wanted it published, in case he were absent from illness, that he was paired to support the governor. But to-day he was on the other side.

The governor is having plenty of advice on the judgeship. Instead of sending in a nomination to-day of a successor to Judge Harris, who has been promoted to Congress, the word came from the executive department, about 20 minutes after the time for the meeting at 2 o'clock, that no name would be sent in to-day. Numerous letters marked "personal" have been sent to the governor on the subject, and what he does or does not will not be for lack of advice. Doubtless strong letters are written for every man prominently mentioned, also perhaps against him. LANDON.

Several selections were rendered by the MacWatters quartet of Boston and the speakers of the evening were William E. Patrick, the president, on "Our league;" William J. CONDUCTOR ASSAULTED.

Man on Springfield Line Receives Blow on Head.

ASSAILANT UNKNOWN, GETS AWAY.

Passenger Made Trouble on One Car and Was Fired; Boarded Another And Fought.

Alonzo Hancock, a conductor on the Springfield line of the electric road, was assaulted in his car between North Wilbraham and Ludlow last Saturday evening, receiving a severe blow on the head. Hancock was on his way to Springfield and continued on the trip, but on nearing the city became so dazed as to unable him to make the return trip, and another man was put on the car. His injuries were not of a serious nature however, and he has fully recovered and is at work again.

The trouble began on the car leaving Springfield for Palmer at 6 15 in charge of Conductor Cahill, a Southbridge man. A man under the influence of liquor boarded the car and took a seat beside a woman, whom he began to annoy. The conductor ordered the man to behave and he retired to the rear vestibule, where he lighted a cigarette. He was advised to "cut it out," and on giving back talk was put off the car at the Bliss switch at North Wilbraham. He then boarded the car for Springfield, which came in a few moments, and attempted to smoke in the vestibule. He was ordered by the conductor to stop, and went inside. When the conductor came along for his fares the fellow struck him a severe blow in the face when his head was turned to one side, knocking him over two seats. Someone notified the motorman of the trouble and he stopped the car, whereupon the man jumped off and disappeared. The man's name was not known, but several people on the car are sure they can identify him.

RESULTS OF CAUCUSES.

Unusually Large Attendance at Both Tuesday Night.

TIE VOTE ON ONE REPUBLICAN NAME

And Work Had to Be Done Over Again. Some Surprises. List of Successful Ones.

There was an unusually large attendance at the caucuses Tuesday evening, the attendance at each exceeding that of any recent year. The contests centered on the nominations for highway surveyor, license commissioners and for town treasurer.

This caucus was held in the town house with these officers: Chairman, Ernest E. Hobson; secretary, William C. Millen. A total of 181 votes was cast.

The Democratic caucus was held in Temperance Hall in Thorndike, Michael J. Farelley being chosen chairman and Frank Twiss secretary. Here 239 votes were cast.

PALMER NEWS.

Nomination Papers Filed.

Six Defeated Caucus Candidates Decide to Make the Trial Anyway.

Last evening at 5 o'clock was the last opportunity for filing nomination papers for names to be placed on the official ballot for the annual election a week from next Monday, and an even half dozen were handed in before the time limit.

The list is: Charles P. Haynes of Three Rivers for license commissioner; John J. Sullivan of Bondsville and Dalvini Fortier Sr. of Four Corners for overseer of the poor, John K Moulton of Palmer for shool committee, Samuel H. Hellyar of Palmer for town treasurer, and Charles T. Brainerd of Palmer for highway surveyor All of these names were on the caucus ballots, but were defeated.

All the above are well known. Mr. Haynes, for license commissioner, has been a resident of Three Rivers for many years, where he has been successfully engaged in business. Dalvini Fortier, for overseer of the poor, has been a long-time resident of Four Corners; John J. Sullivan is a native of Bondsville, where he has lived all his life with the exception of a time of service in the Spanish war, in which he was wounded and by reason of which he has since been obliged to give up his subsequent law studies on account of ill health John K. Moulton, for school committee, although a comparatively newcomer in town, has had a wide experience in school work from service on the committee in the town of Dalton, and has also given much study to the subject. Samuel H Hellyar, for treasurer, is well known to the citizens by a residence in town of over 30 years, during which time he has been engaged in business on Main street; he is known as a capable accountant. Charles T Brainerd, for highway surveyor, is another resident of long standing, with an experience of numerous years in the care of the highways of the town.

What effect these additional names on the ballot will have cannot be conjectured Names placed on the ticket by reason of nomination papers have won out at times in the past, and it will be somewhat peculiar if all of the above should fail in the multiplicity of candidates to select from.

George E. Clough for Town Treasurer.

The caucus nominee for town treasurer to succeed E B. Taylor is George E. Clough, who has received the nomination of both parties for this position. Although a young man Mr. Clough has for close to 12 years been associated with business affairs in Palmer, having lived in Monson until his admission to the bar in 1904. Mr. Clough attended Childs' Business College—now the Springfield Business School—from which he was graduated in 1896, and for more than two years after that he was in the law office of the late Judge W. W. Leach of Palmer. In 1901 he entered the University of Maine School of Law at Bangor, Maine, from which he received the degree of LL. B in 1904, and in August of the same year was admitted to the Hampden county bar. While at the law school Mr. Clough was president of his class during the senior year. Upon his admission to the bar Mr. Clough opened a law and insurance office in the old bank block on Church street, later moving into the Eager block on Main street, and after his association with the late M. H. Robinson moved into his present office in Holden's block at 353 Main street, where he is now located His business associate in the Eastern Hampden Agency dying very suddenly a year ago, Mr. Clough formed a law partnership with former Judge Lewis S Record, who before his admission to the bar was principal of the Three Rivers Grammar school. At the present time Mr. Clough is conducting a successful law practice and with Mr Record holds the agency for several of the best insurance companies. Mr. Clough is married and resides at 590 North Main street.

Cold Cut Trolley Wire.

The electric cars missed their first trip to Three Rivers and Bondsville Monday morning through the breaking of a trolley wire near the Lake Junction. The selectmen on Monday posted notices forbidding the dumping of rubbish along the side of Pond street, where it has been the custom for years to dump all sorts of waste material. OLDEST WALES RESIDENT DEAD.

Samuel Belcher Perry, 91, Native and Life-Long Resident.

Mr Perry took a keen interest in town affairs and had several times held the office of selectman and assessor. He was greatly interested in good roads and built several Waterspouts.

A waterspout is a miniature tornado originating in a strong upward draft of air which occurs above the surface of a body of comparatively warm water. Its effect first becomes visible in a circular motion at the point in the clouds to which it ascends. This becomes a whirl, which condenses the vapor at its center, causing the portion of the cloud there to drop downward in the shape of a gigantic jelly bag. At the same time the continuing upward draft increases the rapidity of its original swirl and the condensed vapor caught within it until the ascending and descending masses join to form the waterspout. Necessarily by this process the air beneath the spout is rarefied, and thus where the phenomenon occurs at sea the water always seems to be sucked up into it, although this is not really the case to any considerable extent. For similar reasons where a waterspout or tornado passes over a building it does most of its damage by exhausting the air outside, causing what is within to expand and blow the structure to pieces.

The White Whale.

The white whale, or beluga, is an arctic cetacean and closely allied to the narwhal. It is pure white in color, twelve to eighteen feet long, whalelike in form, with a huge muzzle and numerous sharp conical teeth.

The white whale swims with extraordinary speed by doubling its huge tail under its body and then striking out with it. Scientists who have studied it in its natural environs say that it is able to catch the swiftest of fishes, often pursuing its prey far up the northern rivers It is gregarious and may be seen at times in herds of forty or fifty

These herds not infrequently gambol around boats in the arctic seas, and the natives of Greenland often capture them with harpoons or nets. The flesh of the white whale, in fact, is a considerable source of food supply to them. From it also is derived one of the finest grades of commercial oil. The skins are tanned and the leather sold in the trade as "porpoise hide."—New York Times.

Sing a Song of Sixpence.

The London Globe attempts an explanation of the rhyme "Sing a Song of Sixpence." Here it is: "The four and twenty blackbirds represent the four and twenty hours The bottom of the pie is the world. The top crust represents the sky. The opening of the pie is the dawn of the day, when the birds begin to sing, and surely such a sight is fit for a king. The king in his counting house counting out his money is the sun. The money the king is counting represents the golden sunshine. The queen, who sits in the parlor, is the moon. The honey she is eating is the moonlight. The industrious maid who is working in the garden before the sun has risen is the day dawn, and the clothes she hangs out are clouds. The bird that so tragically ends the song by nipping off her nose is the hour of sunset."

Traditions of Mother Shipton.

Of all British prophets Mother Shipton is beyond doubt the most celebrated. She was, in fact, all that a prophet and witch should be. In strange contrast to the serious and scientific nostradamus. The day she was born the sky became dark and gloomy and, according to her biographer, "belcht out nothing for an hour but flames, thundering after a most hideous manner." Her personal appearance, described by her admiring biographer in 1662, is scarcely flattering: "Her physiognomy was so misshapen that it is altogether impossible to express fully in words or for the most ingenious to line her in colors, though many persons of eminent qualifications in that line have often attempted it, but without success."—Metropolitan Magazine.

Ups and Downs.

Not every statesman takes his dismissal with the humor of the Duc d'Epernon, who fell into disgrace with Henry of Navarre. Descending one day the great staircase of the Louvre, he met Richelieu ascending it, and on the cardinal asking indifferently if there was anything new taking place D'Epernon replied, "Nothing, except that, as you see, I am going down and you are going up!" Mr. Bloundelle Burton tells the story in "The Fate of Henry of Navarre."

An Unfortunate Situation

By JOHN TURNLEE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The only definite feature respecting my attentions to Phoebe Constant was that they were unwelcome to her father. Mothers are less apt to take definite ground with regard to their daughters, especially men friends, and the only opposition to my being devoted to Phoebe came from her father. Mind you, I was not engaged to her. I was not sure that I wished to be engaged to her, and she had not indicated that she wished to be engaged to me. This matter of love is usually considered as something that comes suddenly, turning a couple from indifference to a wild passion for each other. I admit that there are many such cases, but mine was not one of that kind.

One day Phoebe wrote me a note suggesting that if I had nothing special on hand for the evening I'd better come to see her. I did so and found that her father had gone on business to a neighboring town and would not be at home before 11 o'clock. If there is anything needed to bring about a love affair it is something clandestine. The fact that Phoebe had sent for me to be with her while her father would know nothing about it inspired me with a more tender feeling for her. Indeed, it opened the bud of love. For the first time in my life I put some warmth into my words and bearing toward her and received a corresponding response. When I left her I felt that we had made a beginning in a new relationship.

Mr. Constant kept a large dog on his premises which was unchained every night at 10 o'clock. Not wishing to make my presence during Mr. Constant's absence especially known among the servants, I did not suggest any delay in unchaining the dog, intending to leave just before 10 o'clock. At five minutes before 10 I said good night to Phoebe—no kiss; I hadn't got that far, only a pressure of the hand—and started down the walk leading to the gate. I hadn't gone more than half way before I saw a black mass moving in another part of the yard and knew it for the dog. I was about ten steps from a tree, which I reached in five long ones and, making the jump of my life, caught a branch and drew myself up to a safe place.

Either my watch was wrong or the dog had been let out ahead of time. It did not matter which was the case, I was a prisoner in a tree near a walk along which Mr. Constant would pass when he came home. If the dog had barked Phoebe would have heard him and suspected that I was in trouble. But he did not utter a single growl. I saw no way to attract the attention of any one in the house, and, as to coming down into the jaws of the fierce brute below me, it was not to be considered. When he found he couldn't reach me he simply lay down and waited.

My position was unpleasant in more respects than one. That first sweet passion of love which had entered by blood I found delicious. I knew that a young woman about to enter upon a love affair is very sensitive to any noble or ignoble attitude the man in the case may occupy. I dreaded to be caught by her father upon a tree like a thief, guarded by a watchdog. It was a contemptible position for me and would place Phoebe in an unenviable attitude with regard to her father, indicating that she had received me clandestinely during his absence.

If I could only think of some ingenious way to escape the dog or, better yet, some daring stroke to overcome him I might not only avoid losing prestige, but gain it. I looked about me for a means of escape. The trees were very thick, but toward the gate not thick enough to admit of my passing from one to the other and out of the grounds. Toward the house the prospect looked more favorable. I determined to try it. Better be caught like a burglar than a sneak thief.

By climbing from branch to branch and making some desperate leaps, the dog following me, I finally gained the roof of the house. When I got there I couldn't get back, for the limb from which I dropped, relieved of my weight, sprang upward beyond my reach. I found myself in a sort of roof pocket directly in front of a window.

It seemed to me that I had not improved the situation. I had got rid of the dog, but had been cornered on the roof. In any event I must stay where I was till relieved by human help. I heard a train come in at the station half a mile away, and in about twenty minutes Mr. Constant came in at the gate and spoke to the dog. I rejoiced that dogs can't talk and this one couldn't give me away. Then the front door closed, and the next development was a bright light in the window before which I was standing and from which I could not move. And what was my horror to see Mr. Constant beginning to disrobe.

He advanced at once to draw down the shade and, seeing a man on the narrow ledge of the roof outside the window, was about to turn for some weapon for defense when, placing my face against a pane, I implored him by my expression to desist. The light shone on my features, and he recognized me.

That was the end of my attentions to Phoebe Constant. She never quite satisfied her father but that there was some mystery about the matter greatly to my discredit, and she could never again think of me as a lover.

Opals.

Opals are so sensitive that their beauty is frequently destroyed by their wearer's proximity to an open fire. The luster of this stone is caused by the presence of myriads of little fissures, which deflect the light into the characteristic prismatic color of the gem. The tiniest of these fissures is likely at any moment to destroy the stone.

Resolutions on the Death of Lucy J. Drake

On Friday, February 10, 1911, our Heavenly Father knocked at our doors and summoned one of our number, a loved and respected sister, also a Past Noble Grand, Lucy J. Drake, from out of this earthly life, its toils, ambitions, hopes, disappointments and sufferings; she has gone to the spiritual home.

Resolved, That we express our appreciation of the loss that has come to us—she was an efficient member, interested in everything pertaining to our Order.

She has gone from us forever,
Nay! No! no! We thank thee, Lord,
That she has but gone before us
To her well deserved reward.

We are saddened by her absence
From our Order here to-day,
But in Heaven she'll bid us welcome.
"When the shadows flee away."

Resolved, That this testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be forwarded to the family of the deceased, spread on the records of Alpha Rebekah Lodge and printed in some local paper.

Poor Roads—The Curse Of Our Small Towns.

Many of the smaller towns in our old Bay State think their full duty done if the Main street is kept in good condition. But in neglecting the back roads they are the losers in the long run, for it is very rarely we find the real producers—the citizen who is the very backbone of any township—taking up a residence on a Main street. Of course, this refers to farming communities, for storekeepers thrive best on the main thoroughfare; but the tiller of the soil in almost every instance shuns the principal streets, and to such, poorly kept roads are the bane of his very existence. Why neglect the back roads? Do not the residents help pay the town's expenses by payment of taxes? Are not the dwellers on back roads as useful progressive citizens and as good morally as those who live on the main street? Then why throw them down and compel them to travel on rough roads, overhung with briers and bush, that grow almost in the very middle of the roads? I for one strenuously object to endangering the eyes of my loved ones, who have to ride on these back roads, and I have no doubt whatever but what our courts would give citizen a substantial sum in damages, for the loss of an eye owing to the neglect of the town authorities.

Another and perhaps the most important reason in the eyes of the authorities of any progressive town why the back roads should be kept in decent repair, is the thousands of dollar that such towns turn away from capitalists who are looking for real estate investments, for land upon which factories can be built; for no manufacturer will build in a town where the roads he needs are not kept in repair. One specific illustration of this was of a manufacturer of wooden ware,—water pails, wash tubs, etc,—in which iron and wire was used. This one concern employed 100 men and did business worth thousands of dollars. The lease of his old location will expire in 1912, and the head of the concern goes upon long automobile trips trying to find a durable location upon which to build. He found what he considered an ideal location in a small town in Western Massachusetts, but the land was on a back road and was in wretched condition; in fact the road bed was so bad that nothing could induce him to build in that town. All towns, even the very smallest, should have civic pride enough to do all in their power to attract business enterprises by keeping their roads in fairly good condition. And the supervisors of roads must enter into their duties heart and soul. Nothing is gained by just riding along in a buggy with a nice pliable spring. Let them jump into a cart without a spring and see what their neighbor has to contend with. And I especially recommend this mode of procedure to those men having charge of the road, in Monson, Massachusetts; and I feel assured, after one ride out about two and a half miles from the center of the town, that if they use the back roads, they will have to eat their meals standing up for at least a week.

Wake up, you road builders of Monson! Use all your citizens alike, whether they live on the back road or not. Remember the farmer on the back roads has a God-given right to expect a fair deal and no favors not rightly his. And without exaggeration, you may have a beautiful town, but its beauty is lost track of when one encounters the wretchedly indecent condition of your bad back roads.

A Goat and a Valentine

Instead of a Nuisance, Billy Becomes a Prime Favorite

By MARION C. ENRIGHT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Drusilla Fowler detested the Franklins' pet goat, for it had all but devastated her small domain during the summer. Flower beds had been trampled, shrubs uprooted, and, as for the little kitchen garden near the orchard, the succulent heads of lettuce and later the hard cabbage balls had fallen victims to the insatiable appetite of Billy the goat.

Of course the Franklins were very sorry about it and tried to confine Billy within a hastily constructed fence, but that sagacious and resourceful animal had viewed the structure of wood and wire with a contemptuous eye before he utterly demolished it and resumed his invasion of Drusilla's garden. Drusilla hated him, and the Franklins loved him.

This crisp February morning Drusilla came to the glass door that led from her sitting room into the south porch, and, standing there bathed in the sunlight, she planned her garden for the coming year.

Now, Drusilla in her mind's eye could see the beds blooming once more with roses and pinks and sweet williams, phlox and marigolds and mignonette, while the baffled Billy peered through the palings.

Little Bessie Franklin ran through her own yard waving an envelope frantically. "Oh, mother," Drusilla heard her shout, "somebody has sent me a valentine!"

So this was St. Valentine's day. Drusilla's red lips pressed into a thin red line as she remembered that there was one other thing in the world she detested as heartily as she did the goat Billy, and that was St. Valentine's day. The hot color flew to her cheeks as she recalled events which had happened ten years before and which had thereafter made that anniversary a detestable day.

She had not been engaged to Gregory Ware, but on the 13th of February Gregory had said to her that there was something to be settled between them. "You'll know tomorrow, Drusilla, and you'll believe what you get, won't you?" he had whispered in an agony of embarrassment, for Gregory was the shiest man in the world.

And Drusilla had guessed that he was to confess his love in a valentine, and she was radiant with happiness, for she would joyfully believe anything he might say to her in the tender missive. So she had told him shyly that she would see what it said and so put him off while her heart was beating wildly.

Then the next day had come, and there was no valentine, and the next and the next, and it had never come. Drusilla had grown very stiff and hurt, and Gregory had never come to ask an explanation, and after awhile he went away to another village and found work there, and Little River saw him only occasionally and Drusilla not at all.

So Drusilla always avoided going to the postoffice on Valentine's day that she might evade even the appearance of being interested in the anniversary of the good saint. But today—and she frowned as she recollected it—there was a matter of sending a money order to the city that must be attended to, for an impecunious cousin had written and asked for a loan to tide over a financial difficulty. Drusilla Fowler was not a shirker where duty presented itself, and so she swallowed her repugnance and buttoned herself into a thick warm cloak and pinned on her most becoming hat, for Drusilla had pride in her appearance.

Her adventures began from the very moment she passed out of her own yard into the street. The Franklins' goat was hungrily browsing on the privet hedge that surrounded his master's yard, and as he turned his little evil eye on Drusilla she involuntarily uttered a vicious little "Scat!"

Billy wheeled about on the pivot of his hind legs, reared himself menacingly, dropped his head and made one dive after Drusilla Fowler. But she had gone. With the speed of an antelope she had picked up the skirts of her long cloak and darted down the street, the angry goat leaping after her with increasingly swift gait.

Men dashed to head him off and dodged his threatening horns; women screamed and took to the opposite side of the street; children scattered like chaff until there only remained on the long street the flying red cloaked form of Drusilla Fowler and the plunging gray coated Billy after her.

The first building into which she might safely turn was the postoffice. It stood at the corner of the main street and the road that ran to the river. The doors were usually wide open even in this wintry weather, and there would be friendly hands to help her in and to close the portals against the invasion of Billy. Once she glanced behind and saw his waving gray whiskers and the glitter of his evil eye and renewed her speed.

At last the postoffice. Drusilla dashed across the street up the wide stone steps and reached the top as the frenzied goat clattered his hoofs on the bottom one. Drusilla was conscious that big familiar hands, warm and friendly, grasped her own and drew her to a place of safety behind a tall-broad shouldered figure—Gregory Ware.

The goat bounded up the steps and slipped through the closing doors, his hoofs skating along the oiled floor; then he saw his reflection in the glass front of the tier of letter boxes and paused, staring, belligerent, bleating angrily.

Some one laid a tentative hand on his back and was rewarded with a vicious lunge. Billy renewed his gaze in the glass. He pawed the floor angrily; he bleated once more, and then before the horrified onlookers could prevent him he bent his head and crashed violently into the glass front, shattering it in a thousand flying fragments and toppling the whole structure on to the startled postmistress and her assistant.

Fortunately nobody was hurt, not even Billy the goat. The glass front of letter box No. 13 was impaled on one horn, and on the other was a fancy embossed envelope that inclosed a valentine. Somewhat subdued, he was captured by several citizens of Little River and tethered to the doorknob. Then one and all went forward to assist in restoring order in the chaos of mail matter.

Drusilla, pale and frightened, still hovered in the corner into which Gregory Ware had thrust her and which he had left without a word to help clear up the wreckage. Fanny Bicknell, the sharp faced, sandy haired little postmistress, pointed a skinny finger at Drusilla, while her little dark eyes flashed resentfully.

"I declare, Drusilly Fowler, ain't you got any better sense than to tag that goat of the Franklins into the post-office? I expect the gov'ment will get after you. You've broke all the rules of the office. It says no dogs allowed inside, and that means goats and such. I thought you didn't take no stock in the Franklins' goat."

"I don't," retorted Drusilla, with spirit. "He chased me all the way down here. He's the bane of my life. You can look to Mr. Franklin for damages."

"I shall," said Miss Bicknell acidly, and then, addressing the men who were picking up glass preparatory to raising the fallen section of boxes, she added: "What you men fussing over there? Remember that's all gov'ment mail matter you're handling."

"Picking some of these letters out of the dirt under your boxes, Miss Fanny," said Gregory Ware grimly. "I should recommend that you have something done about your boxes. The whole thing is cracked and warped, and the mail box is full of cracks. Look under here where it stood!" He pointed to a square dust outlined space on the floor where several yellowed and dirty missives were mingled with bits of dirt and splintered glass. "You're the postmistress, Miss Fanny. You'd better see what these letters are doing underneath the mailing box." He stood back while the fussy little woman came forward and picked the letters out of the accumulated soil. She scanned them closely—there were three in all—and then she looked hesitatingly around the office.

"These must have slipped through the crack in the mailing box," she said after awhile. "Here's a bill from Fryer & Kermit for Anson Rowell Come to think of it, Anson's dead this five years, and Fryer & Kermit went bankrupt anyway, so there's no harm done there! And here's a postal card for Mrs. Beebe, saying that Burus & Co. ain't got the sauple of blue cloth she asked for, and, land, it's dated two years back, so that don't make no matter either, because Mrs. Beebe's wearing black now anyway. And—here's a letter for—mercy me, are you there, Drusilly Fowler? Here, Gregory, give that letter to Drusilly while I boss these men." She thrust a yellowed embossed envelope into Gregory's hand and turned away.

He came toward Drusilla, his eyes fixed on the missive in his hand, his face white beneath its coat of tan. When he spoke his voice was thick with emotion.

"Drusilla, here's a letter Miss Fanny just found under the mailing box. Like as not it's been there all this last ten years, ever since I mailed it one night before Valentine's day. I never understood—why—you—never answered it," he said with slow emphasis as she took the letter from him. "Now I know, but I suppose it's too late.

She opened the missive with shaking fingers and drew from within a lacy and flowered valentine. Wreaths of roses and forget-me-nots surrounded two loving hearts, and underneath was a printed verse that was heavily underscored in ink:

While I protest my heart is thine
I would inquire if thine is mine.
If this be true pray give a sign
To say you'll be my valentine.

And the name of Gregory Ware was signed to it, and the date was ten years ago! Drusilla stared at it until all the coldness had fled from her eyes and a great tenderness lavished her face. Ashamed to lift her betraying glance to his serious inquiring one, she pressed the valentine with unconscious grace to her heart.

"Oh, this ought to have come before—it ought to have come before!" she cried passionately.

"Is it too late now, Drusilla?" asked Gregory softly. "It's never too late to be happy—if you want to be," he suggested.

"I want to be," sighed Drusilla contentedly, and then later she added, "Who would have thought that goat of Franklin's would prove a blessing in disguise?"

Little River folk watched agape, and nobody but those two understood why Gregory Ware and Drusilla Fowler led the Franklins' pet goat home with such solicitude or why Gregory bought it afterward and changed its name to Valentine.

A Great Battle Painter

How He Got His Start

By GERALD L. PERKINS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The battle of Gravelotte had been fought; a smoke mist still hung over the field, though in the gathering darkness it was gradually becoming imperceptible. A man carrying a portfolio and paraphernalia necessary to sketching left the field and, making his way to a hut on a hill overlooking the scene of the engagement that had occurred that day between the French and the Prussians, entered the hut and asked if he might have some supper.

"Certainly, monsieur," said a woman who was there, "but we can give you very little. The soldiers of both armies have taken all we have except a few bits that we hid in the cellar. Come, Fanchette, bestir yourself and set the table!"

The table was set and the supper put upon it. The stranger sat down, and Fanchette poured into his glass some of the cheap wine of the country. She was between seventeen and eighteen years old, a simple French maid who had no secrets from any one in the world.

"You wear a sad look, Fanchette," said the stranger. "Is it from seeing the slaughter today?"

"No, monsieur, I did not look that way."

"Well, then, tell me what troubles you."

"It is this, monsieur. Antoine Brisson went out among the fighting and received a wound. He is lying now in the next room."

"He is your brother?"

"No, monsieur."

"Well, then, he is your lover?"

To this the only reply was eyes cast upon the floor.

"What was he doing out there—fighting?"

"No, monsieur; he has not yet become a conscript. He will not be the age for a month."

"Well, then, what business had he on a battlefield?"

"Sketching!"

"Sketching? That's what I was doing there. When I have finished my supper I will go in and see him."

The stranger chatted on with the girl and easily gleaned from her that she and Antoine could not marry because she had no dot. After having supped and smoked a pipe the artist went into the room where Antoine was lying. The boy had received a flesh wound, but not of sufficient importance to endanger his life.

"So you were making sketches of the fight?" said the artist. "That is my business. I have been drawing for one of the Paris illustrated papers. Let me see what you have done."

Fanchette took an improvised portfolio that she had made for her lover of two pieces of pasteboard laced together with a string and brought it to the artist. There were blood stains on it, but he did not mind that. He had seen plenty of blood that day. He opened the portfolio, took out what there was in it—five or six sketches—and began to look them over.

"Where did you learn to sketch?" he asked the boy.

"I have never learned, monsieur," he replied.

"Never studied in an art school; never had any instruction?"

"No, monsieur."

The artist went on looking at the sketches one after the other and when he had seen them all looked at them again. Then he turned his eyes to the boy on the bed.

"Do you know, my boy, that my paper sent me here to make sketches of this battle? I have graduated at the art school with honors, and yet you who have never taken a lesson have done what I cannot do."

"What do you mean, monsieur?" asked the boy, his eyes opening very wide, while Fanchette was all attention.

"You are a born battle painter. You have put into these crude sketches an action that I have not been able to put in mine. And you have known what scenes to select. Your soldiers move; they fight; they are impelled by the demon of war; they die—really die, while mine—well, mine beside yours are like toy soldiers."

"Oh, monsieur," exclaimed Fanchette, clasping her hands, "how good you are to say that!"

"Good to say that! I'm not talking to please you. I'm telling you the truth. And, to prove what I say, if Antoine when he has recovered will come to Paris I am sure I can interest art lovers in him who will see that he receives instruction."

"Oh, monsieur," replied Fanchette, "how can he do that? He has no money. He would have to walk to Paris."

"Not at all. I will take these sketches with me. They will be used in one of the illustrated papers and will be well paid for. The money received for them I will send to Antoine."

The same night, having hired a conveyance, the artist set out posthaste for Paris. Antoine's sketches were produced and created a sensation. The money paid for them was sent him. He went to Paris, where owing to the interest created by his pictures he was taken up and educated by the paper that published them.

All this occurred forty years ago, and the great battle painter has flourished and passed away. His widow loves to tell how he got his start.

And Reformed Him?

"Mabel always said she was born with a mission to reform something, and she was right."

"Indeed?"

"Yes; she married a minister's son."

A Philadelphian was praising the late Calvin Wells. "Had you known Mr. Wells," he said, "you'd have easily understood his success as a manufacturer and as a journalist. A better, quicker judge of men never existed.

"I remember once at a dinner in Pittsburg during the Boer War, a British visitor praised the valor of the British troops. Inasmuch as the Boers were having everything their own way at that time, this made us all smile.

"Well, the Briton began to praise one of Gen Butler's retreats.

"'Buller,' he said, 'was splendid. He retired without losing a man, or a flag, or a gun.'

"'Yes,' said Mr Wells, 'or a minute.'"—Philadelphia Record.

Artless Child.

Flossie (six years old, to lady caller)—Ma said for you to sit down, that she'd be in in a minute. It isn't raining, is it?

"Why, no, Flossie. Why do you ask?"

"'Cause when ma saw you coming she said it never rained but it poured."

Black Inhabitants of France.

Lying so much off the beaten track, the village of Port Lesne, in the Jura department of France, is visited by but few from the outside world, and consequently this tiny community of men and women of color is but little known. It is not a large village, for its inhabitants number only about a hundred, but every one is either black or copper colored. It owes its origin to the fact that about a century ago the famous negro chief, Toussaint L'Ouverture, was brought from Haiti and imprisoned in Fort de Joux. Many of his friends, all negroes, followed him and encamped near his prison on the bank of the little river Loue. From that encampment grew the village of Port Lesne, and when Toussaint L'Ouverture died more than 100 years ago his friends decided to remain in France. The passing of years and intermarriages have transformed the settlement into a French village of colored folk, all of whom are enfranchised.

Genuine Sardines.

Genuine sardines are the young of the pilchard. Their name comes from the fact that they are most numerous off the coast of Sardinia. They swim in the spring in shoals containing millions—fish shaped shoals ten miles long and a half mile wide. The sardines are netted and taken at once to the shore. There they are washed, scraped and sprinkled with salt. The salt is soon removed, the heads and gills cut off and there is another washing. Then, on beds of green brush, the fish are dried in the sun. Next they are boiled in olive oil till cooked thoroughly. The packers—women always—take them now and pack them in the tin boxes we all know, filling up each box with boiling oil, fitting on the lid and making the box air tight by soldering the joints together with a jet of hot steam. Sardines are more or less perfect according as they are prepared more or less immediately after their capture and according as the oil they are packed in is more or less pure.

Towser's Loss.

"Hello, old chap," greeted the crowd at the club. "Back from your hunting trip? Bag anything?"

"No," responded Chappy Badshot wearily.

"Well, no wonder. You are a back number. The idea of going hunting with a tailless pointer."

"Oh, don't blame poor Beppo! He had a tail when he started."—Omaha World-Herald.

The Worst to Come.

"Do you think we have heard the worst of the discords in our party?"

"Not yet," replied the musical man. "Just wait till our glee club gets to practicing."—Exchange.

THAT AWFUL BACKACHE

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was complete run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have to backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Moon's Gap, Kentucky.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's compound.

The testimonials which are constantly being published in these advertisements are guaranteed to be absolutely genuine. m

Cured Thrush.

Her feet were rotten; the frogs came out; she laid down most of the time. I thought she would die, but I used the Liniment as directed and she never lies down in the daytime now."

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

Kabyle Rugs.

With what greed does the lover of beautiful weavings handle the cream white fabric, with its blue, jewel-like, intricate border, or the all over figured rug, indigo blue figures with but little white showing, the blue interspersed with bits of fine red and yellow, so small in quantity as compared to the blue that it only serves to warm and mellow it, but seen near one finds that there are innumerable tiny patterns in color running through the blue, which sparkle as do the red and blue lights in the black opal.—Handicraft.

The best way to carry Ashes is in a Hod!

Crawford Ranges

Have an Ash Hod in the base into which all the ashes fall far below the fire. They can't bank against the grates and warp them, and they can be emptied easily without spilling.

The Coal Hod is alongside the Ash Hod—out of the way. This feature is a wonderful labor and trouble saver and is patented.

Another trouble-saver of the Crawford is the patented Single Damper. One motion—slide the knob to "kindle," "bake" or "check"—the range does the rest. No damper mistakes.

The Oven has cup-joint heat flues that heat it alike in all parts.

CHANGES AT LIBRARY.

New Rules Which Are Intended To Aid Patrons.

FREE ACCESS TO STACK ROOM NOW.

"Reserve List" System Adopted For Books Much in Demand. New Officers Elected.

The Young Men's Library Association held its annual meeting last Friday evening, and took several actions which it is confidently expected will make for the improvement of the service rendered the public.

One of the most important changes is the opening of the stack room to the public, allowing book seekers to freely inspect the volumes in the library and make such selections as they desire; the books then being taken to the desk for charging. This is in accord with the most modern methods elsewhere, and will no doubt prove eminently satisfactory here.

Another important change is the establishment of a reserve list for books which are much in demand. In the past it has been difficult to secure a certain book because it would be taken out almost immediately on its return to the shelves, sometimes being transferred from one card to another for weeks at a time as persons who wished to read it became aware that it was in possession of a friend. Now if anyone wishes to read a certain book they leave their name with the librarian, and when the book comes in it is held for them 24 hours and they are notified. Failure to call for the book within the time limit gives the right to the next person on the list. In this way a book is certain to be secured in time.

A proposition to establish branch libraries in the several villages of the town was laid on the table after discussion, and will be disposed of later.

Brimfield Citizens' Caucus.

Rules Misinterpreted, and Work Has To Be Done Second Time.

The Citizens' caucus was held in Brimfield Tuesday evening at 8. George M. Hitchcock was chosen moderator and Fred N. Lawrence clerk.

At the annual town meeting last year it was voted to adopt the Australian ballot system and the caucus Tuesday night was held under the rules of the Australian caucus act. No one was thoroughly familiar with the requirements of the act, and the caucus had proceeded until 9 30 o'clock when it was discovered by Orrin C. Hicks that the voters were proceeding illegally because the nominations should have been made by ballot and under a plurality vote, rather than a majority vote. The proceedings were then begun all over again, the caucus was called to order a second time and all of the proceedings were repeated, except that they were in compliance with the act which the town had adopted. As a result the caucus did not adjourn until 11.45 o'clock. There were about 50 voters present and practically all of them remained until the end. The following nominations were made: Town clerk and treasurer, Miner H. Corbin; selectmen, Orrin C. Hicks, John Shanley, Merritt S. Dunham, Orus E. Parker, Samuel H. Adams, Charles F. George; school committee for three years, Mrs Martha E. Streeter and Rev. Francis S. Child; school committee for two years, Dr. Robert V Sawin and Mrs. Bertie A. Barnes; assessor for three years, George W. Sherman and W. E. Pratt; overseers of the poor, Charles C. Brown, Samuel H. Adams, Dr. R. V. Sawin, W. O Smith, John H. Noyes, George E. Hitchcock; tax collector, Charles F. Tarbell and Samuel H. Adams; constables, Orrin C. Hicks, Philip A. Leach, George W. Sherman, George E. Hitchcock, Charles H. Fiier; tree warden, John W. Brown; library trustee for three years, Mrs. Martha E. Streeter and Charles C. Brown; cemetery commissioner for two years, Orrin C. Hicks; auditors, Clarence B. Brown and James Noyes. The officers of the caucus were authorized to fill any vacancies that may occur in the list as nominated.

Ware's 150th Anniversary.

Committee Reports Plan For the Celebration Next September.

The committee on the 150th anniversary celebration of the town of Ware have prepared their report The exact date for the anniversary would fall on November 25, but the day fixed for the observance is Labor Day or September 4. The committee give in the report some of their reasons for this advancing of the date. So far as the plans have been matured, it is arranged as follows: On Sunday, September 3 the pastors of the churches will be asked to preach sermons and arrange programs suited to the occasion, with a possible out-of-door song service in the afternoon. On Monday in the forenoon a parade is scheduled, with special local historical features. At noon a banquet will be held in a pavilion in Grenville park, to be followed by short after-dinner speeches by local and out-of-town speakers In the afternoon there are to be sports of various kinds in the park and on the river, and in the evening a river pageant and fireworks on the water, with the park thrown open to the public.

The committee in connection with the preparation of the town history report that Rev A. Chase was selected as the historian, and that the outcome of his labors would be in their opinion a fitting and permanent memorial of the celebration Three citizens, according to the committee, provided a fund of $500 to defray the expense attending the preparation of the history, and the members say that it is their present intention to finance its publication personally, if possible, and thus relieve the town of any expenditure on this account. It is also proposed to limit the edition to 600 copies and sell them at a price low enough to insure disposing of them all.

Warren's Appropriations.

Total Amount, $37,315. Technicality Loses Night Policeman.

The annual appropriation meeting of the town of Warren was held Saturday afternoon, with 150 voters present. Joseph G Hastings was elected moderator. There was little discussion, and the 34 articles were acted upon in less that 1½ hours, a record for an annual meeting.

In addition to routine business it was voted that the town should pay for surety bonds for the town treasurer, clerk and tax collector; it was voted to install steel cases in the vault in the town treasurer's office; it was voted to buy a small piece of land on River street for a barn for the road machinery and supplies; it was voted to accept $1200 from 10 benefactors, the interest to be used for perpetual care of lots in Pine Grove cemetery, and it was voted that the selectmen appoint a committee to have charge of the late John C. Cutler property, given in trust to the town, and to invest the net income in some savings bank. The matter of a night policeman at West Warren was lost on a slight technicality. It was voted by 33 to 32 to appropriate $600 for that purpose, but when it was discovered that the motion had not included the word raise, a motion to raise $600 was lost, 36 to 39 votes, so that the matter is in the hands of the selectmen, but it has never been customary for them to act unless the town has voted to raise the money.

The appropriations follow: Town officers, $1950; schools, $15,800; election expenses, $250; bonds for town officers, $230; library, dog tax and $400; paupers, income of town farm and $2200; highways and bridges, $3200; sidewalks, $1000; fire department, $2500; soldiers and sailors' relief, $750; town hall building, income and $400; street lights, $2500; care of cemetery, $395; board of health, $1000; insurance, $700; interest, $1000; Memorial Day, $100; contingent account, $1400; miscellaneous, $1540; total, $37,315.

SUNDAY MORNING FIRE.

Department Called to Blaze at Shearer's Corner.

A BARN AND HENHOUSE DESTROYED.

Cow Also Cremated. Loss Small, Only About $300. Origin of Fire A Mystery.

It was just 4 o'clock Sunday morning when an alarm from box 38 called the firemen to Shearer's Corner for a fire in a barn on Arnold street belonging to Charles W. Walker. The firemen were not long in responding, but it was a case of "nothing doing" so far as saving the building and contents was concerned, and they were totally destroyed. The loss on the barn and contents is estimated at $300, as the building was small.

The fire was discovered by the family which occupies the upper story of the house, and the structure was all ablaze when first seen The fire was so hot that Mr. Walker found it impossible to release a cow which was in the building, and she was burned A number of hens in a henhouse adjoining were released, but the house was burned. The origin of the fire is a mystery, though there seems little question that it was incendiary; so far as is known, there was no one in the barn after 8 o'clock of the evening before.

C Barnard was re-elected clerk and treasurer of the company. Doings of the Legislature.

New Phase of Bar and Bottle Opposition—Social Function—More Business, Less Politics—Walker Denies LaFollette Favoritism—Butler's Statue Question.

BOSTON, March 15, 1911

A new turn has been taken by the opponents of the bar and bottle law. It revives in a new form the entire controversy, and it throws doubt upon the entire outcome. If the latest move of the opponents of the law is successful, they will gain more than they would by a direct repeal of the obnoxious legislation, for they would have the privilege of selling more liquor in their saloons than at present. In the House yesterday afternoon, Mr. Doyle of New Bedford, one of the minority of the liquor law committee who favors the repeal of the bar and bottle law, moved to recommit the adverse report on the repeal. Mr. Conway of Boston asked the reason for the recommittal, but the only explanation was that the committee wished to make its report in a new form. Now it is understood that the real purpose of the recommittal was that, instead of covering four different matters by one report, as the first report did, they will make a separate report upon each of the four That will give them an opportunity for a separate report upon the petition of Thomas J Fuller for a different classification of the liquor licenses. The nub of the bill is in the difference in privileges given for the sale of liquors under a first class license and the fact that a first and fourth license may be issued together. The description of the first class license is in these words: "To sell liquors of any kind, to be drunk on the premises, and in quantities of less than five gallons not to be drunk on the premises." There is the permit for the entire bottle trade as it is at present carried on, and for much more, for no conveyance which a man could carry about his person would hold five gallons. Then follows the description of the fourth class license as follows: "To sell liquors of any kind, not to be drunk on the premises, and may also be granted in conjunction with a license of the first class." Thus, if this bill should become a law, the bar and bottle trade would not suffer the slightest inconvenience, but would rather gain over its present facilities. This presentation shows how lively the contest is and how every expedient a fertile brain can invent is brought into action. The outcome of the struggle is still in doubt. The facts that the committee stood seven to four against the repeal indicates that they will also be opposed to the Fuller bill, but it may be possible to get a larger vote for the Fuller bill as a substitute for the adverse report than they could for a straight repeal bill.

There was a function last evening at the Somerville Club, which took in officials and members enough to entitle it to mention in state house matters, especially since this is the third year and it seems to be an institution. Invitations came through Representative Charles L. Underhill of Somerville, one of the many candidates for speaker, a prominent member of the club, and one of the leading characters in Gilbert and Sullivan's "Gondoliers," which was produced. Mrs. Underhill was also one of the leading personages in the cast. There were present with their wives, Gov. Foss, Lieut.-Gov. Frothingham, President Treadway and Speaker Walker. Many members of the Legislature were present, and the amateur performers gained much credit for their spirited acting, while the chorus singing was fine. When the official party entered the orchestra played "Hail to the Chief," and the entire audience stood and applauded. But the feature of the evening was at the end of the first act when many big bouquets were sent up to the stage and Mr. Underhill was called out for a speech by the clamor of the members: "We want a speech, Underhill." One of the floral pieces was a big gavel made of roses. The representative expressed his appreciation and added that he hoped that it would be a good omen for him.

Regarding the contest for office with which the session opened, there is not as much of it as there was. The fact is, as one of the participants told me, friends of Underhill, Washburn of Worcester and others told them frankly that it would be better for them to stop playing politics and give their time to the business of the Legislature. There has been much of this feeling on the part of members and the candidates have come to realize that they will improve their chances for holding the gavel next session if they pay more attention to the public business and less to their personal fortunes.

This morning's dispatches from Washington putting Speaker Walker in the attitude of promoting the boom of Senator LaFollette for president have called from the speaker a prompt and complete denial of any such function on his part. He is not a LaFollette man, but sticks to President Taft, just as he would be expected to do in a state where Taft was the choice of the state convention.

This forenoon the friends of the proposed $25,000 statue to Benjamin F. Butler on the state house grounds had their turn in addressing the committee Their case consists in the services rendered to the nation by Butler in the early days of the civil war, especially, and also during the war. The answer made to the charge that Butler sent military supplies and food to the confederate troops, to be used in destroying the Union troops, was met by the remark that such a condition was reported by a detective and that if you want a detective to find anything and tell him what you want, he will find it. Everything which was said at the hearing, with small exception, had been brought out before. The main speech of the hour was by James H. Wolffe, a colored Grand Army man and lawyer of Boston, who served under Admiral Porter, who made out a case on the part of the 10,000,000 of the colored race in the United States of almost idolizing Butler. Col. A. C. Drinkwater, who was treasurer of the Butler campaign committee when he was elected governor, put in a strong plea for him. These strong friends of Butler discredit entirely the statements put forth so positively by Major Henry L Higginson and others tending to prove that Butler was the biggest scoundrel, and perhaps traitor, developed during the civil war. There is no harmonizing these different views. It is to be noticed that Grand Army post are sending in their support for the proposed statue.

The militia department has been the center of much activity during the last few days, and there is much eagerness of the officers to go to Texas, if there is to be any real service. There is much pride in having the department in a state of readiness and many officers want to get practical experience in the field.

It is not to be supposed that the outcome of the consideration of the superior judgeship was reached without a great deal of

PALMER NEWS.

Young Blizzard Yesterday.

Sudden Change Wednesday. Street Railway Men Have Hard Time.

There was a decided change in the weather Tuesday night and another Wednesday—or more properly speaking there were two of them Wednesday. The weather Tuesday had been of the ideal spring kind—warm and balmy. Tuesday morning dawned with a hard rain, a regular spring "soaker." About noon the skies cleared and the sun came out nice and warm. The early evening bade fair to be of the spring order, especially when it began to rain abont 8 o'clock. But a drop in the mercury soon turned the rain to snow and 9 a young blizzard was raging, accompanied by a high wind. There was not a great fall of snow—not more than a couple of inches—bnt the mercury dropped to almost zero yesterday morning.

The wind caused the street railway company considerable annoyance. It blew down a large tree near the Fay bridge on the Monson line, and a pole was also down on the line at the same point. A large limb blocked the track at the Tenneyville junction for a time, bnt by hard work and rnnning cars all night to keep the line clear the regular trips were made on time yesterday morning. It was the worst night of the winter for the railroads—that is, the most disagreeable for the men who ran the cars.

inside history which will never get published. There is no question that it was settled at one time that Frederic J. Macleod was to be the appointee. There is no question that he had some very fine and influential indorsements. It is beyond doubt that his professional ability has been obscured by his political activity, bnt that he has a highly trained and jndicial mind and would, in all probability, have sustained well the traditions of the bench. But there was the unquestionable fact of his chairmanship of the Democratic state committee for two years and that he was the head of the party organization which elected the governor. Therefore he finally saw the situation in the light of some of his critics, at any rate sufficiently to write a handsome letter to the governor whereby the latter was relieved of his embarrassment and the state gets John D McLaughlin as the new judge. There is good reason for supposing that the Boston city machine was friendly to McLaughlin, for the statement which was given to all the Boston morning papers to-day came from the mayor's office in the city hall.

There is much unrest under the civil service laws this year, but the system seems to be coming through without any serious change. The merit men wanted to extend the civil service rules to counties, but they were defeated in that. On the other hand, the soldiers' preference bill gets a nnanimous adverse report and its friends know that it has no chance A queer bill was put in this afternoon for the benefit of Fall River call firemen, permitting them to become permanent men if they pass a physical test only, but only present men are to be affected, and the law is to lapse in five years. WITH THE BOYS OF SIXTY-ONE.

An Interesting Department Now Running in the Boston Journal.

We can hardly realize that only 50 years ago, from the towns and cities in which we now live, men were rushing to the South to take up arms against their countrymen in the greatest civil war in history. Nor can we appreciate the eagerness with which news from the front was sought by those left behind, nor the difficulty in sending information in those days, when the telegraph was in its infancy and the telephone was nnknown

The Boston Journal was particularly fortunate to have Charles Carleton Coffin as their representative with the Union Army. Physically unable to enlist, he sought a position as correspondent, and served The Journal throughout the war Often it was possible for him to get in touch with The Journal only after a hard ride on horseback to the telegraph office, bnt he never lost conrage, and oftentimes The Journal gave the world the first news of actions vital to the success of the North. One of his great "scoops" was on the Battle of Gettysburg, first news of which he sent to The Journal, from which it was wired to President Lincoln at Washington. In the same manner President Lincoln first learned that the Stars and Stripes were again flying over Fort Sumter and the city of Charleston. In his work he was ably seconded by Ben Perley Poore, who was the Washington correspondent of The Journal during the war.

The Boston Jonrnal is reprinting from the files of 50 years ago newsy and interesting paragraphs regarding the great battles and prominent men of that period, accompanying each by the comments of a veteran who saw many of the notable events and figures of the Civil War.

This column will be a daily feature of The Boston Jonrnal, and, united with the woman's page, financial news, able editorials and snappy sporting items, will increase the interest with which The Boston Jonrnal is received by many thousands of good New England families

MARCHING TO GLORY

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I didn't know whether it was waking from sleep or dreams or whether during an abnormal condition I had looked upon a vision of that after death period which is almost universally believed to be sealed from mortal eyes.

My theory as to this condition of mine is that, being abnormal, it produced abnormal pictures. We see no colors. What we consider colors are simply millions of waves impinging on the retina of the eye. Comparatively slow moving waves produce red; rapidly moving waves produce violet; those between the two produce intermediate colors. Now, may not the retina when turned awry be readjusted to receive that which it is not intended to receive? In other words, may not what I am going to relate have really existed instead of having been a dream or a vision produced by strained conditions?

I was in the thick of the fight. Men were shot down beside me, in front of me and behind me. The noise was like a thousand thunderstorms. There were the deafening explosions of cannon, the rattle of musketry, the shrill neighing of horses, shouts, groans, shrieks. Presently something struck me and turned me half around. My legs afforded no support; I felt myself sinking; the terrific sounds about me grew faint—then oblivion.

Suddenly I was again conscious. I sat up, supporting myself with an arm. The light had moved a short distance beyond me. Men were hurrying to the rear, and men were hurrying to the front. Two men were carrying past me another on a stretcher. As I looked I saw something mistlike forming above the one borne along. There was nothing describable about it, appealing, as it seemed to me, to a sense of which I had never before been conscious. Like a smoke wreath, it rose and slowly drifted away.

I knew that a wounded man had died while being carried by me. I did not know how I knew it, but I had no doubt of it. Turning my eyes to the front, where a hundred yards from me a thinned line of my comrades, from whose ranks I had dropped, were receiving a sharp fine, I saw men falling, some crawling away, while others were limping rearward. On some who fell immediately the mistlike substance I had seen on the man who had died while passing me appeared, rose and drifted away. Had I not seen it leave the body I should have taken it for a puff of smoke from the mouth of a gun.

Then I noticed that all these wraiths were moving in the same direction, gathering, clustering about common centers, grouped in what seemed to be one faint luminous cloud. From it broke away a line like men marching by platoon or company front, then another line and another till many such lines at equal distances had moved out from the whole, which gradually grew less till a column of the dead was marching on a rising curve.

At first this curve led them away from me, but the direction, ever changing, presently caused them to pass over my head, yet since they were constantly rising they passed far above me. It was a sight to see, these souls of dead soldiers passing from earth on their way to spiritland. Ever turning as they were, at last I realized that they were passing to their long homes in a gigantic spiral.

I thought of those spiral nebulae, developing universes, seen in the heavens through telescopes and wondered if this form, as it marks the beginning, marks also the end of the infinite combination of matter and soul.

At last the receding column became a single line, growing thinner till it formed a barely perceptible curve like that of a comet.

So rapt was I in this strange vision that I was oblivious to all else. Then I noticed that the battle was ours. I dropped upon the ground again, and gradually all things about me vanished. I must have passed the night unconscious on the battlefield.

When I came to myself right above me and within a foot of my face was a blade of timothy, on the end of which a spider was crawling. I watched him running about on the cereal for awhile, then noticed that it was morning. Occasionally I heard a distant shot. I knew a picket fired it, for with an army in the field picket shots are always to be heard. Occasionally a volley came over the fields which I knew had been fired over some soldier's grave. As I grew more conscious of my surroundings I grew also conscious of a pain in my side and a terrible stiffness through my whole body. Then I heard a voice say:

A soldier with a spade in his hand stood over me, and an officer with a sash about his waist, the color of which I knew denoted a surgeon, came and bent over me. He called his assistant, who put a flask to my lips.

"I saw this fellow last evening," said the latter, "and I was sure he was dead."

I recovered and have often since told this story of what I saw on that battlefield. But people usually tap their foreheads knowingly or say, "You were delirious, old man."

I know that what I saw I saw. I did not dream it, for so far as animal life was concerned it was not in me. I was for the time being lifted out of it. I believe I was given a vision of a spirit condition.

In a Predicament.

"You haven't what I sent you for, and you have been gone more than an hour."

"I was awaiting my turn and forgot what you sent me for."

"Why didn't you come back and ask?"

"I was afraid I would lose my place in the line."

Pushing and Pulling.

It has been wisely observed that most operations can be more efficiently performed by drawing them along through their proper course than by attempting to push and jam them through, just as it is much easier to pull a rope than it is to push it. There are probably not many persons who have tried to push a rope, but very many have attempted things almost as perverse. In many manufacturing establishments, for example, there may be seen numerous examples of men wasting a large part of their energy endeavoring to move heavy pieces of work upon small trucks, pushing and inboring in the exertion of effort, a small fraction of which goes to cause the actual progression. Even when such an effective aid to transport as an industrial railway is installed it is often used at less than its proper efficiency because there is too much pushing and not enough pulling.—Cassier's Magazine.

Bags That Last.

"The young chap whose morals I tremble for just now is my nephew," the city salesman remarked. "He has a position as errand boy in a banking house. He is a bright lad and as steady as they make 'em, but since he got that job in the bank his women relations are urging him into crime. They do not advise him to pick his employers' pockets or run away with the day's deposits, bnt the principle involved is just as reprehensible. They ask him to abstract a few bags that the silver money is carried in. The women want those bags for sofa pillow covers. They are made of material that will never wear ont and feathers and down simply cannot sift through. By boldly asking for what he wanted the boy has secured enough bags to incase his mother's sofa pillows, but if he supplies the rest of the family I see nothing ahead of him but a career of crime."—New York Sun.

Do You Want to Get Slender?

A food specialist said of dieting: "The simplest, easiest and most ridiculous diet to bring down the weight is the one dish diet. At no meal, that is, should more than one dish be eaten. The dish may be what you will—Irish stew, macaroni and cheese, roast beef, vegetable soup, bacon and eggs—but no courses are to precede or follow it. You may eat as much as you choose of the dish, and yet, for all that, you will lose weight steadily. It's the variety of dishes—the oysters, soup, fish, turkey, mince pie, ice cream—it's the variety of dishes, creating an artificial appetite when the body has really had all it requires, that causes corpulence. If we confine ourselves to one dish we know when we've had enough—we don't know otherwise—and the result is that we soon drop down to the slimness natural to children, animals and temperate and healthy men and women."—Kansas City Star.

Uncomplimentary.

"Ah, Miss Ethel, I can read your thonghts, y'know." "Oh, Mr. Chumpleigh, then please don't get insulted!"

MATTERS POLITICAL.

Two of Present Board of Selectmen Decline to be Candidates Again.

With the caucuses near at hand and with so many new candidates in the field anxious for office, the coming town election promises to be more exciting and interesting than in recent years.

Both the Republican and Democratic town committees have made up their caucus ballots. The Republican voters and friends of O. C. McCray and J. S. Stewart were considerably surprised to hear that these members of the present board of selectmen will not be candidates for reëlection. There is a certain element in town that is opposed to these men because of their presence on the board a year ago. Both have served for several years and have never been defeated for any town office. They have each an extensive business of their own and do not care to run for any office under the present circumstance. J. P. Herlihy, the other member of the present board, will be a candidate for reëlection.

The Democratic town committee will not announce the names of their candidates until the night of the caucus next Thursday evening.

R. C. Murray will again be a candidate for tax collector, and the names of Fisk G. Rogers and Henry F. Miller will also appear on the Republican caucus ballot. The declination of M. F. Moore and H. W. Lancey to run for school committee have brought forward several persons with nomination papers, and the names of Luke W. Closson, Omar E. Bradway, C. A. Sweet and Rev. Abram Conklin will be on the Republican ballot, and it is rumored that James Pendergast will be a candidate on the ticket. It was hoped by the friends of George Wills that he would be a candidate on the Republican ticket, but he refuses to run.

The terms of F. J. Ball as water commissioner and assessor both expire this year, and he is to be a candidate for reelection for both offices.

A SINGULAR BIRD

By EDWARD BATY

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Miss' Barker, I reckon we uns have had enough o' this matrimonial business. Anyway, I have, seein' your husban' he's run away with my wife."

"Yo' mean, Mr. Todler, thet your wife run away with my husban.'"

"It's just as bad one way as t'other. I'm goin' to shut my baby boy up and never let him see a gal," said Mr. Todler.

"I was thinkin' o' doin' the same with my baby gal."

"We mought do it up hyar in these mountings and bring 'em clean up without the boy seein' a gal or the gal a boy."

"It's powerful lonsome. Nobody ever comes up hyar unless it's revenue men lookin' fo' stills."

"Waal, mornin', Miss' Barker."

"Mornin', Mr. Todler."

The homes of these two persons were far up in the highlands of east Tennessee. They were successful in keeping their children from seeing one of the opposite sex till they were sixteen years old. Then the boy demanded a gun. His father gave him one on condition that he never hunt off the inclosure. But one day the youngster followed a bird from tree to tree till he got on to Mrs. Barker's premises. There, sitting under a tree knitting, he saw Miss Barker. They looked at each other in astonishment.

"Oh, mother," called the girl, "come here! There's the funniest thing you ever saw!"

But Mrs. Barker was not within hearing.

"You mean," said young Todler, "that you are the funniest thing in the world. Queer, isn't it! You can talk just like a man, only your voice is different."

"You must be some kind of a woman."

"You must be some kind of a man.

"I know; mother often told me that there was a thing like you that I must keep away from. She says they poison women's lives. She's always been afraid I'd meet one of them."

"Pop's told me the same thing about what he calls a she man. He said one of them wrecked his life."

"Well," said the girl, "I don't see anything so terrible about you."

"Nor I about you."

She approached him, put her hand on his shoulder, drew it away quickly, put it on his neck, took off his hat and combed his hair with her fingers. He touched her cheek.

"Are you going to bite me?" she asked.

"Not I. Have you got any poison about you?"

"Poison! No. Why do you ask that?"

"Pop says these she men are vipers. That means snakes. Most snakes are poisonous."

"Your pop must be horrid."

She patted his cheek with the palm of her hand. He put his arm around her waist. With the other hand he pulled her chin around near his face. Instinct told him to touch his lips to hers.

"Isn't that nice?" he said.

"Kind o' nice."

"Do you wish me to do it again?"

"I don't care."

He did it again and again. Then he noticed her hair done up in a knot at the back of her head. Pulling at it, he at last got the hairpins out, and the coil fell on her shoulder.

"By gum!" he exclaimed. "What in thunder do you let your hair grow like that for?"

"Why do you cut yours off?"

Following a natural inclination, these two young things clung to each other, the boy winding his arms about the girl and the girl about the boy.

"I'm thinking," said the girl.

"About what?"

"My mom has warned me against your kind, and your pop has warned you against my kind. If we tell them anything about this they'll tie us both up the way they do the dogs."

"We needn't tell."

"Suppose we don't."

They concluded that they were too near the she-man's mother for safety, so they strolled away to a safe distance and remained together several hours. When they separated the he-woman kissed her, which shows plainly that lovers' kisses at meeting and parting are a matter of instinct.

When the girl went into the house and met her mother she said not a word about the queer creature she had met. And this shows that a prime law of nature with the sex is to get the better of each other, which enables them to get the better of their husbands. Her mother asked her where she had been so long, and she said she had been out in the woods listening to a frog croaking in the creek. A queer sound came from it she had never heard before.

When the boy went home his father asked him if he had had any luck. He replied that he had seen a bird of paradise, but it was so beautiful he hadn't the heart to kill it. His father suspected from an absentmindedness about his boy that he had seen a girl. He asked what the bird looked like.

"Pretty near as big as I—a big topknot at the back of its head and no legs. At least I could not see any."

The father groaned.

The next day Mr. Todler held a conference with Mrs. Barker, with the result that Todler took his son to her house, a minister said things over the two youngsters, and they were told that each could keep the other for a pet.

Missing

By JONATHAN C. MURRAY

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Some persons of this generation do not know that, though one now seldom sees the American flag at the peak of an ocean vessel, just before the civil war we were fast absorbing the carrying trade of the world. Steam hadn't then displaced sails as it has almost entirely done today, and our clipper sailing ships were the finest and fastest on the seas.

In 1854 I was third mate on one of these ships. We were bound for Hongkong at the time of which I am speaking, having sailed from New York. There was no Suez canal in those days, and we were obliged to go around the Cape of Good Hope. We were approaching the South African coast when we overhauled a derelict.

A derelict is always an interesting object plunging helplessly about among the waves with no hand to even attempt to guide her. Then one's curiosity is always excited as to why and how she was left by those who were on her, and the imagination gets to work at once. Our captain hove to and said to me:

"Mr. Morton, take a boat, go aboard of her and investigate. Take tools to scuttle her and powder to blow her up, as the case may require."

I was much pleased at the order, and it was not long before I was aboard the derelict. I found a good deal of damage done on deck, evidently by a storm. A number of the lights had been broken, and the seas had drenched the cabin. Everything was in confusion as if those on board had been under great excitement. In one of the staterooms hanging against the wood partition was a daguerreotype of a girl evidently seventeen or eighteen years old. The happy young face was a great contrast with the wrecked condition of things about. I took it from its hook and put it in the pocket of my pea jacket.

I couldn't make out anything about the identity of the craft. Some of the boards of the stern where the name was painted had been knocked off apparently by the waves, while other letters were illegible. The letters left were:

R T A S I G O .

I made a copy of them, giving the proportionate spaces between them. But there was nothing else aboard to identify the ship. She had been knocked about by wind and waves so long that her inside was pretty well washed out. I put fifty pounds of powder in her, attached a fuse, lighted it and pulled away from her. Before we reached the ship there was an explosion and she sank.

As soon as I went off duty, choosing a secluded spot, I took the daguerreotype out of my pocket to have another look. There's nothing remarkable in a young sailor out at sea on a long voyage making a companion of a girl's picture and falling in love with it. At any rate, this is what I did.

On our way back I determined to hunt through the whole of North America to find the flesh and blood that corresponded with my likeness. We had a quick voyage, but not quick enough for me, though a hunt for her would be like looking for a needle in a haystack. Nevertheless as soon as we reached our home port I went to work, overhauling the records of all the ships reported lost. But I found so many of them that I despaired of hitting on the right one. If I could supply the missing letters to the ship's name I might get into communication with some one who could tell me about my girl. But this seemed impossible. I made a list of all ships reported missing and compared my letters with their names, but I must have been very stupid, for I couldn't make them fit with any of the names on my list.

Two years later, while on the New England coast, I went ashore with some of my mates to enjoy ourselves in a summer garden. We had hardly got seated when I saw at a neighboring table the original of my picture. She looked up and, seeing me staring at her with a singular expression, looked embarrassed; but when I arose, took the daguerreotype from my pocket—I always carried it with me—and handed her her own picture I thought she would faint.

"Where did you get that?" she asked, flushing and turning pale alternately.

"Is it your likeness?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Are you sure?"

"I know it by the dress and by the artist's name stamped upon the casing. It was taken four years ago. I gave it to my brother just before he sailed on his last voyage."

"In what ship?"

"The Martha Washington."

I took out my pocketbook and drew from it the original memorandum of the letters left on the derelict's stern. They fitted in exactly with the name the girl had given me.

"What became of her?" I asked.

"She was never heard from."

I told her of the derelict I had visited and of the finding of the daguerreotype in a stateroom that had doubtless been her brother's.

I was the means of publishing the fate of a ship that had been on the list of missing vessels for four years, thus giving the relatives of those lost on her the first and only information received by them.

My next voyage I made in a ship I commanded and took the original of the daguerreotype with me as my wife.

A Range of Possibilities.

"I have been told," said the confident performer, "that I make my violin sound like the human voice."

"Yes," replied the candid friend, "but there are so many kinds of human voices."—Washington Star.

A Miracle Under Orders.

In "The Glory of the Skin World," translated from a Persian manuscript, is a story that will interest Christian Scientists:

"Nadir, builder of the 'golden porch of Nadir,' in the sacred city of Meshed, was a world conqueror and a lord of perception, albeit cruel. Of his power of perception they relate that one day when he entered the sacred shrine he saw a blind man invoking the aid of the imam, and upon inquiry he learned that he had been there for several months. The great monarch asked him why his faith was so weak that his sight had not been restored and swore that if on his return he found him still blind he would cut off his head. The wretched man prayed so fervently and fixed his mind so intently on the imam that within a few minutes his sight was restored."

Announcement made of the free trip to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition

WORD has been received from SUNSET, the Magazine of the Pacific and the Far West, of the organization of the Sunset Panama-Pacific Club. The Club offers a four-weeks' trip to the Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915, including railway fare, Pullman, diner, hotel accommodations, admission to the fair, side trips to points of interest, all in return for a little time each week to be devoted to the work of the Magazine.

The exposition is to be held to commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal, connecting the Pacific and Atlantic. From all indications it will be by far the greatest World's Fair ever held.

The Magazine has issued a very attractive booklet descriptive of the trip, and giving further particulars, which will be sent on application.

The membership is very limited and it is not likely that more than one or two applications will be accepted from this vicinity.

Mr Trudeau was the son of Mr and Mrs. Antoine Trudeau He was born in Chambly, P Q., in 1853 He came to Three Rivers in 1881, and conducted for several years a meat and grocery business in partnership with Octave A. EXPLOSION IN DWELLING.

Gasoline From Outside Causes Damage in Cellar at T. D. Frame's.

An explosion occurred Monday afternoon abont 5 o'clock in the tenement occupied by Thomas D. Frame on Maple street. The explosion started a fire in the cellar, but it was immediately extingnished. The interior of the house was damaged somewhat and several pieces of china and glassware were broken. Several doors were blown open, one of them with such force as to drive a coat and hat hook through the panel. A cover on the sewer manhole in the street in front of the house was blown into the air several feet, and the report of the explosion was heard some distance away. Emory Paine was the only member of the family at home at the time of the explosion, and very fortunately was not injured otherwise than receiving a severe shaking up. The occupants in the other side of the house received a severe shock and were also severely shaken up by the explosion. The explosion was caused by gasolene from a tank located near the Otis Company's barn, abont 400 feet away, which was so-situated that the contents ran into a surface sewer with which several of the dwellings on Maple street are connected. The faucet in the tank was found open earlier in the afternoon and the contents running to waste. The gasoline fumes filled several of the houses on the street, and were probably ignited by the fire in the heater in Mr. Frame's cellar.

Poetry and Pleasure.

The poet writes under one restriction only—namely, the necessity of giving immediate pleasure Nor let this necessity of producing immediate pleasure be considered as a degradation of the poet's art It is far otherwise It is an acknowledgment of the beauty of the universe, an acknowledgment the more sincere because not for aught but indirect; it is a task light and easy to him who looks at the world in the spirit of love Further, it is homage paid to the native and naked dignity of man, to the grand elementary principle of pleasure, by which he feels and lives and moves.—William Words worth.

INFLAMMATION AND PAIN

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa. "I was troubled for a long time with inflammation, pains in my side, sick headaches and nervousness. I had taken so many medicines that I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. A friend told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to health. I have no more pain, my nerves are stronger and I can do my own work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me after everything else had failed, and I recommend it to other suffering women."—Mrs. Wm. Seals, 605 W. Howard St., Creston, Iowa.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

In almost every neighborhood you will find women who have been restored to health by the Pinkham medicines. Inquire among them and see. Many would not have a testimonial published, but would talk about their cure to another woman. m

"Two bottles Cured My Rheumatism"

"I have been a sufferer from rheumatism for about two years, and have used many liniments and patent medicines which gave me no relief. A lady friend of mine told me she had used your Liniment and found relief at once. I got two bottles and they cured me. I think it is the best Liniment a person can have in the house. I shall always keep a bottle in my house as long as I can get it."—Mrs. E. R. Wade, Morrisons, Va.

What offers a better chance to the man of means than a strongly secured investment of this kind? In what better way can a young man or woman, now in prosperous circumstances, prepare for the future and old age, when perhaps an annuity will be needed, or how can parents more easily provide for their children's future than to buy for them orchard tracts which after five years will bring steady incomes and independence for life. As was predicted by the advocates of the license commission, the transferring of the license granting powers to that board transferred the contest at the polls from selectmen to that body. There were only four candidates for selectmen—and there seemed to be no particular contest for the election there—while there were six for license commissioner and the effort put forth to elect to these positions overshadowed all others on the whole ticket. W. E. McDonald, one of last year's board, was dropped and Horace R. Paine chosen in his place by a narrow margin of nine votes over the next nearest man, John W. Fay. The campaign was rather strenuous in the last day or two, and as usual, numerous "campaign stories" of greater or less mythical origin and substance were in circulation.

John W. Millerick, the candidate last and this year of the street railway men, failed of re-election to the board of selectmen. In the three-cornered contest for overseer of the poor Francis J Hamilton was 422 votes ahead of his nearest competitor, a comfortable and safe lead. The new town treasurer is George E Clough, who defeated S. H. Hellyar by a big lead. Michael McKelligott will have the care of the highways again, C. T. Brainerd failing to win back the place he formerly held. The only other contest was for the school board, and there Messrs. Mooers and Wilson succeed themselves.

It is a peculiar fact, but not a candidate who ran on nomination papers secured an election.

The town stays in the license column, the vote being an unusually large one, a majority of 410. This is much greater than in recent years, and is hard to account for. Undoubtedly the transfer of the power to grant licenses from the selectmen to the license commissioners had something to do with the figures, but it is more probably explained on the ground that it "just happened"

The selectmen met Monday evening and organized. Mr. Warriner is chairman of the board and Mr. Holden clerk. Meetings will be held every second Thursday evening: T. J. Crimmins of Palmer and J. F. Mansfield of Bondsville were appointed special night police until April 1; C. B. Thomas and Thomas Roche of Palmer and J. F. Lunan of Thorndike were appointed special police for one year; keeper of lockup, James Knox; soldiers' burial agent, H. S. Hobson; moth inspector, C H Keith; cattle inspectors, Dr. M. H Davitt and C. H. Keith.

The returns were rather slow coming in. The polls closed at 3 o'clock, and the first precinct to report was C at 4.20, followed at 4.40 by B; A reported at 5.18 and D at 6.16

Precinct.	A	B	C	D	Total
Registration	639	240	237	143	1309
Vote cast.	524	245	225	114	1108
Per cent.	82.	84 3	95	80	86 4

The banner precinct for getting out a full vote was C. Of the 237 names on the list 225 were voted; five were out of town, leaving only seven voters left in the place who did not get to the polls.

Frederick J Hillman, president of the New England Audit Company of Springfield, will speak before the Men's League of the Congregational church next Wednesday evening on "Scientific Business"

Belchertown to Celebrate Anniversary.

A meeting of the citizens of Belchertown was held Monday evening to discuss the plans for observing the 150th incorporation of Belchertown and for the Fourth of July celebration. It was decided to hold the celebration on Monday and Tuesday, July 3 and 4, with fitting services the preceding Sunday. It was also voted to invite Rev P. W. Infantile Paralysis at Warren

Another case of anterior poliomyelitis has been reported to the board of health in Warren this week, the victim being Sidney Burt, the five-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs Lewis S. Burt of School street. The case is a mild one. Dr. Melvin G. Overlook, state inspector of health, was in Warren and on investigating the source of contagion discovered that there were some hens in the neighborhood which had been recently paralyzed and he was of the opinion that there might be some connection.

BRIMFIELD.

The funeral of James Reid Brown, who died last week Wednesday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. William Laird in Palmer, was held in the Brimfield church Saturday afternoon, Rev. Frank Sherman Brewer, pastor of the Congregational church in Palmer, officiating, assisted by Rev. William Jennings of Brimfield. Mrs. C. W. Williams of Palmer sang two selections. The floral tributes were very fine. The bearers were George M. Hitchcock, Charles S. Tarbell, Orrin Hicks and Edward B. Brown.

LINEMAN TAKES TUMBLE.

Fell From Pole on Thorndike Street Tuesday.

GETS A BAD BREAK IN ONE ANKLE.

James McKenna, employed by the Central Massachusetts Electric Company as a lineman, fell from a pole near Oak Knoll cemetery on Thorndike street soon after noon Tuesday, and received a bad break of his left ankle. Drs. H. C. Cheney and S. R. Carsley were called and the man was made as comfortable as possible and taken to his home on Fox street. There a more extended examination showed that both bones were broken just above the ankle and that one of the bones was splintered. It was deemed best to remove him to a hospital, and he was taken to the Springfield hospital on a special electric car. He is doing well and is expected to be about again in about three months.

Just how the accident occurred is not known. McKenna had been in the habit of working with a safety belt, but did not have it on at the time he fell. He had done some work on the pole and had gone back to make another splice. It is suggested that he may have received a slight shock from the signal wires of the electric road, which were close to him.

BELCHERTOWN.

Miss Culley will remain in charge of the Federal street school. Miss Towne will go to Union and Miss Browne to the Washington district.

Myron G Ward has bought the Dwight homestead on the corner of Maple and Main streets, and will take possession April 1. Mr. and Mrs. Ward will sell their farm

At a recent meeting of the Baptist society it was voted to call a pastor about May 1. The following officers were chosen; Clerk and treasurer, Herbert Curtis; finance committee, Nelson Barrett, B. C. Davis and B T. Thrasher.

Mrs. Letitia Murdock Warner observed the 93d anniversary of her birth last Friday. The day was passed quietly with the family. In spite of her advanced years Mrs. Warner is very active and greatly interested in the affairs of the day.

WARREN.

Narrow Escape From Death.

Howard H. Young and E. A. Manning, two signal men employed on the New York Central road, narrowly escaped being killed last Friday morning. They had some work to do between Warren and West Warren and left Warren on a hand car soon after the local passenger No. 21 left at 9.32 a. m. They had gone only about half a mile when they were overtaken by a light engine, which was running at a rapid rate and the engineer was blinded by smoke and steam and did not see the hand car until he was almost upon them. Both Manning and Young jumped when the engine was within 50 feet of them and landed in safety beside the track, just as the hand car was struck and entirely demolished, being strewn along the tracks for 100 yards. Both men miraculously escaped injury. They supposed they were protected by the signal behind them, but must have placed their car on the track after the engine entered that block.

Funeral of Miss Ada D. Lathe.

The funeral of Miss Ada D Lathe, who died in the Wesson Memorial hospital in Springfield Wednesday of last week, was held Saturday afternoon at 2 in the Universalist church. A prayer service was held at noon at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Royal Lathe, who live about four miles south of Warren. There were many floral tributes, including a wreath of roses on an easel from the Wesson hospital, where she was employed as a nurse. Burial was in the family lot in Pine Grove cemetery, and the bearers were J. R. Wallace of Worcester, Henry McCrellis, R. Freeman Clarke and Milton H Lathe of Warren.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph St. George have been spending a part of the week with their son, William St. George, and family in Clinton

Dr. H. H. Moore reported to the board of health Monday two cases of diphtheria, Mrs Eva Christian, 30, wife of Albert G Christian, and her son, Albert, six years, being the victims. The house, which is off Quaboag street, in the rear of the Bradford yarn mill, was quarantined by Haschal Underwood, agent of the board.

Word was received in town Saturday of the death of Timothy I Donahue, 63, at Brockton. He was found dead in the hayloft of a barn, but the cause of death was not stated. Mr. Donahue was for many years a resident of Warren. He is survived by five children and a brother, Dennis Donahue, who lives in Warren. The body was brought to Warren for burial Monday. The bearers were James White, Bernard J. Ruddy, George J. Riley and Frank E. Linnehan.

The annual meeting of the parish of the Congregational church was held last week Thursday evening in the chapel. Charles Walker was chosen moderator, and the following officers were elected: Clerk, Ralph Patrick; treasurer, Charles D. Perkins; member of parish committee for three years, Arthur S Tucker; auditors, Henry S. Howe, Edward J. Spencer and William E. Taylor. It was voted to raise the money as usual by the rental of pews, which will probably occur next Thursday evening.

Doings of the Legislature.

BOSTON, March 22, 1911.

Labor people are going to get some legislation out of this Great and General Court. The Senate has voted in favor of the bill to permit labor unions to put fines upon their members as a matter of discipline to make them pay up their dues and attend to their duties as members of the organization. This is a long step in advance of the acts of two years ago when the upper branch was decidedly hostile. It shows how these measures make progress by means of the discussion and the opportunity of bringing them to the attention of the members year after year. It is beyond doubt that if it were not for this repeated opportunity of discussion, this apparent duplication of work, year after year, the progress of these classes, and, presumably, the progress of the entire state, would be seriously delayed, for it is true that the same principle applies to all other good causes, even those desired by the unpopular philanthropists of the Back Bay, as truly as to the labor propositions. But the Senate has defeated, by a tie vote, the peaceful picketing bill. It was President Treadway's vote, which did the bill to death. His side of the dispute will approve him and he will make votes for the lieutenant governorship with them. Labor men will look at his vote from precisely the other point of view and he will lose with them. As one of them put it yesterday, it looks to them as if he had "ate his tag." They say that he was already committed to their side on the eight-hour bill, on the 54-hour bill, and on the workingmen's compensation bill. Therefore it seems to them the more inconsistent that he should vote with their opponents on a bill which they have been pushing for years and which they think is free from reasonable objection. There is much to be said from the workmen's point of view regarding their right to inform would-be substitutes during a strike of the fact that a strike exists and there is not the slightest doubt that this matter will enter into the campaign for the second place on the ticket this fall, nor that it will come up to the state house next session. Having reached the point where the Senate is a tie and where there is no doubt that the House would pass the bill, it is certain that the petitioners will be all the stronger when the case comes up again.

Mr. Flower of Greenfield spoke for the farmers who suffer by deer when he tried to have the House substitute for an adverse report a bill to provide that the cost of assessing deer damages shall be included in the cost of the damages done by deer. The committee on fisheries and game reported the bill favorably, but the committee on ways and means were unanimous against it. Mr Flower, who is the popular new member, made his maiden speech and was given a little round of applause when he finished. But Mr. Gifford of Westport, who was the particular watchdog of the treasury to bark on this bill, said that the proposition was too trivial for consideration; that the people who ask for damages ought to be glad if they had their claims allowed and not to try and get pay for their time while proving their claims. It was a close voice vote, but it was with Mr. Gifford, and Mr. Flower did not try to get a count, as it would probably have only emphasized his defeat.

Not since men can remember have the judges of the state been roasted in debate as they have been by Messrs. Conway, Lomasney and Reidy of Boston in the debate of the bill to permit retired judges of the superior court to be recalled to service, by their written consent and with the written approval of the chief justice of that court, at a per diem of $10, to assist when there is a demand for extra assistance. The retirement system of the court was held up to severe ridicule on the ground that it was made law for the sake of getting off from the bench judges who were too old to serve and who would not resign. This bill was characterized as an effort to give them further opportunities to take money out of the state treasury, and it was charged that the money would be graft; the judges were called "old fellows" and the pension fund was said to be a bribe to get these men off from the bench when they would not resign otherwise. Lomasney said that the judges were politicians just the same as other men, but they were slicker about it. Of course Chairman Saunders of the judiciary committee and other legal lights of the House stood up for their profession and eulogized the honor and ability of the Massachusetts judiciary, but there is no denying that there was much sympathy for the views expressed by these three Boston democrats. Lomasney used the strongest language and told how the hodcarriers are taxed in order that the judges may send their sons to Harvard, but the other members were hardly less severe in their words and manner. When it is remembered that Mr. Conway is one of the cleanest and ablest men in the House, is of long experience and is the least of a partisan who can be found, there must evidently be something on that side.

Some comfort is extracted by the woman suffrage people from the nature of the adverse report, with three dissenters, on their annual petition for general suffrage. The fact that the report is reference to the next Legislature, rather than leave to withdraw, is claimed to be a point in their favor. But this point will make little difference with the vote on the petition or with the practical consequences. If they choose, next year, instead of circulating a new petition, they can take the old one from the files, but, considering the superfluity of persons who are ready to circulate a new petition every year, this will not make an appreciable difference. The real situation is apparently about as it was last year.

Once more the farmers and milk consumers lock horns over the bill for public milk distributing stations in cities and towns of over 10,000 people. The bill which has been reported into the House, is the same as was passed last year, but only to be recalled from the governor before he had acted upon it and to be killed in the Senate. The bill gives local boards of health power to distribute milk free to persons who, in their opinion are worthy objects of the charity, or at not over cost to others. Taking this in connection with the advanced bill, already reported, for giving public school children meals free of expense, or at cost, it is seen that the state is making marked progress toward the care of the poor by the taxpayers. Now it remains to be seen if the bills pass and then whether they tend to pauperize the recipients of the public bounty.

The report of an appropriation of $25,000 for a military statue for Benjamin Butler comes from the committee on State House and libraries which has a majority of Democratic members, which is a very unusual circumstance in a Legislature where the Republicans have a majority in each branch. There are four dissenters,—Senator Greenwood of Worcester, the

Trolley Freight House.

The trolley express and freight house, which has been promised and anxiously awaited for nearly two years, is beginning to appear something more definite than a phantom shape or a fairy tale. The contract for the building has been given to the Flynt Building and Construction Company of Palmer, and work will be begun as soon as the ground will permit. The structure will be on land near the Weeks House, and a spur track, for which the selectmen long ago gave a permit, will be built to it, the railroad company macadamizing the triangle of the street formed by the spur track leaving the main; in addition the company will macadamize a large piece of the street outside their tracks.

The completion of the work will prove a great benefit to Main street travel, for the street at the foot of Commercial street is daily blocked with the cars of the express company, there being at times as many as three grouped there, with teams loading and unloading freight. There have been frequent times when teams or autos have found it difficult passing, but this will all be done away with when the new freight house is in working order.

He was born in Ogdensburg, N Y., in 1857 and was a son of Richard and Jane Pearson Hart Lloyd of England. He was a descendant of Sir Richard DeBoyle. He married in 1880 Miss Ida M. H Mr. Lloyd came to this state from Taftsville, Vt., going to Westboro in 1885 and to North Grafton in 1891. He came to Palmer in 1893, established himself in the harness business and continued in that until his death. Besides his widow, he leaves a brother, U. R. C. A Suggestion.

If the committee of 15 wishes to facilitate as much as possible the work of the town meeting next Monday, it will instruct whoever is to make the report for the committee to give the reasons for the recommendation on each article. This was not done last year and resulted in the loss of much valuable time. The warrant is a long one at best, and will take much time in digesting. If the committee will tell why they make each recommendation it will avoid waiting until someone raises the question and the desired information is given.

Town Meeting Next Monday.

The annual appropriation meeting of the town will be held next Monday in the town hall. The warrant is a long one, and it is expected that, in spite of the work of the committee of 15 in dissecting the articles, there will be a lot of argument and a long session before "Finis" can be written across the warrant. THE VILLAGE JACKASS

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

The village jackass was the real thing—an animal instead of a man. He entered the village of Sandy Hill one night at 10 o'clock, and no resident has ever discovered where he came from. There were various theories put forth, but they were theories only. There weren't any theories, however, as to what happened when that jackass struck the town. There was a public square, and he stood on that square and made public proclamation of his arrival. He brayed a haw-haw-haw that woke every sleeper in the village. Men, women and children tumbled out of bed and into the street in fear and trembling.

There was little sleep in the town the remainder of that night. At regular intervals of ten minutes that jackass brayed.

That haw-haw-haw was not a mournful bray. On the contrary, it had a jovial ring. It seemed to the people of Sandy Hill to be saying:

"Hurrah for me! I've struck it at last! We won't go home till morning and mebbe not then!"

When morning came the question was what to do with that animal. It was not easily answered. Drive him on toward Lansingburg and let that town welcome or reject him. The job was given to a gang of boys. The jackass protested, but the gang was too many for him. He was clubbed down the road for a mile and warned to keep moving on. One hour later he was back on the public square braying his joy at being home again. He was escorted toward Fishburg, but he returned again. He was escorted toward Edwardsville and toward Cranford, but he never reached those places. He put in the day at it and then returned to say how glad he was that he was in the hands of his friends once more.

That night the town cooper took charge of the animal and by tying a butter firkin to his tail prevented any braying. No jackass can bray with head and tail down. Next morning he was driven within a mile of three different towns and told that the inhabitants were waiting to welcome him, but before the last citizen of Sandy Hill had gone to bed that bray sounded in his ears. The rejected was back on the job.

Thousands of public meetings have been held for this or that reason, but it is doubtful if one was ever held before or since on account of a lone jackass. Sandy Hill held one, and the debate was spirited. A stray jackass had forced itself upon them. What was to be done in the case? All efforts to unload him on other towns had proved futile. No one had ever heard of a jackass without an owner. This beast must have one. He must call and pay damages and take his property. He must be advertised for. If he didn't show up in the legal time then the jack would be sold to the highest bidder.

That was the course pursued, but no owner came to make his claim.

The day came when the jackass was to be sold for his keep. He was to go to the highest bidder without reservation. That meant that his bray was to be thrown in. The auctioneer hollered in vain. Not a bid was made. No one offered even a dollar.

How much pounding can a jackass take and keep up with the procession? This one had more clubs, broom handles, hoe handles, ax helves and pitchforks broken over his back than would fill a freight car, but he came up to the scratch smiling. He was hit with clods, stones, brickbats, old cans and bottles and picket fences, but he didn't grow weary of well doing. One night when he broke up a prayer meeting with his bray a good deacon rushed out and knocked him unconscious with a blow from a crowbar. It was believed that he was dead, but next morning saw him wandering about as gayly as ever.

Again, a young man was courting a girl. He was interrupted by that haw-haw-haw just as he was about to ask the girl to be his'n. He ran out and fired a dose of bird shot into the disturber No use. The jack was frisking next day.

Nevertheless there must be a limit to all things. Even an ownerless jackass must draw the dead line somewhere. This one held on for two years before he drew. Then he decided that he hadn't been used square in that Christian community. It had sent cash to the heathen of Africa and left him to eat moldy straw. It had been kind to dogs and horses, but had bruised and battered him on various occasions. He would shake the dust of the town off his hoofs, but in going he would leave a memory behind.

A railroad was being run to the village. The grading contractor was doing much blasting, and half a mile from the village limits he had 500 pounds of dynamite in a shed. The jackass took his departure at night. His way lay past that shed. He stopped and backed up to the door and kicked it in, and kicked at the boxes piled up. Then Sandy Hill had an earthquake that tore things to pieces and created damages to the amount of $25,000. That was ten years ago, but it still shows the scars and still talks of that explosion. When you ask what became of the jackass the man will shake his head and drop his voice as he replies:

"That's what we have never found out, and we shouldn't be a bit surprised to see him come back any day. If he does we shall have to abandon the town!"

Punctuality Promised.

"Has your husband an old suit that he ain't usin', ma'am?" asked the tramp, respectfully removing from his head the shapeless remnant of a hat.

"No!" shortly answered the woman of the house, eying him suspiciously "My husband has only one suit, and it'll last him six months yet."

"All right, ma'am," he rejoined, taking from an inside pocket a soiled scrap of cardboard and making a memorandum on it with the stump of a lead pencil. "I'll be round ag'in six months from today. Afternoon, ma'am!"—Stray Stories.

The World's Southernmost City.

The capital of the territory of Magellan, belonging to Chile, is Punta Arenas, the southernmost city in the world, with a population of about 12,000, good wharfs and stores, paved streets and extensive traffic. All vessels going through the strait stop at Punta Arenas, and much wool is shipped from there. It is a free port, has a wireless telegraph station, is a station for the Chilean navy and does a large business in the coaling of steamers. It is, in fact, a crossroad station between the east and the west.

Not His Nerves.

"Doctor," said the sick man, "I'm afraid my nerves are in bad condition."

"Oh, no," replied the physician, "that's not what is the matter with you. The fact that you have sent for me after ignoring the statements I've been sending you regularly during the past year and a half indicates that your nerve's all right."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Resolutions.

WHEREAS, we cannot comprehend the ways of Providence and in the suddenness of the blow cannot fully realize that our brother who was with you and us is no more. Our Almighty Father has called to Him our late brother, Michael E. Murphy, in the prime of life and death has taken him from our midst.

Resolved: That we deplore most sincerely so sudden a loss and grieve at this so unexpected and untimely departure from life.

Resolved: That we extend to his relatives our sincere sympathy in their saddest hour of affliction; that these resolutions be spread upon the records of Court Palmer, No. 186, Foresters of America, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the relatives of our deceased brother, and be printed in the Palmer Journal, and our charter be draped in mourning for a period of 30 days.

A WIDOW'S WANTS

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

It was generally understood in the village of Crowell that Deacon Henderson had his eye on the Widow Glazier. Why not? The deacon was fifty-five and a widower and wanted a home. The widow was fifty and lonely.

Deacon Henderson dropped into the widow's cottage one day, and after complimenting her on her hollyhocks and tomato vines he said:

"Widder, do you know what the folks are saying?"

"La, no!"

"They are saying that you'n me ought to get married."

"But I can't get my breath! It's all so sudden. Deacon, if we get married we'll live in your house, won't we?"

"We will."

"And you'll put down a new carpet on the parlor floor?"

"For why? The one there is a good one."

"It's a rag carpet, and it's twenty years old. I helped Sarah cut and sew the rags. I shall want a brussels with patterns of roses."

"Um! Too much extravaganee."

"Then I won't marry you."

The deacon went away in a huff and trying to make himself believe that he had a lucky escape. However, after thinking it over for a week he returned to say:

"I guess I'd be willing to buy that carpet."

"But I want something else. We must have three lace curtains. They must be long 'nuff to sweep the floor."

"Store carpet and store curtains!" shouted the deacon in dismay. "Why, widder, you'd bankrupt us in a month! No, no! Green paper shades are good 'nuff for us."

"Then I guess we won't get married. Folks have hinted that you was stingy, and now I see you are."

Away went the deacon for the second time, and for two days he patted himself on the back. He could figure that he had saved over $50 on that deal. The rag carpet and the paper shades looked good to him as he sat in the parlor, but after three or four days he found the old loneliness creeping over him. He would give in to her. He waited one day more and then called on her under pretense that he had mislaid his family almanac and wanted to know when the moon would be in her third quarter. After finding that out he said:

"Well, widder, mebbe you are right about the carpet and curtains."

"Deacon, I've been thinking since you were here we must have four stuffed chairs to put in that parlor to go with the new carpets and curtains!"

"Saints and sinners! Stuffed chairs! Stuffed chairs in our parlor! Never, Widder Glazier, never! The carpet and curtains would tempt Satan 'nuff. I don't propose to risk any more."

"Four stuffed chairs, deacon, and mebbe a sofa to boot."

"I'm going home. Good day!"

Those stuffed chairs, with an additional sofa looming up in the near future, were a shock to the deacon. They meant extravagance; they meant vanity; they meant the breaking down of long erected barriers. No; it could not be. He must continue his lonely life by his lonesome. He did continue it for ten long days and nights. Then he went over to ask the Widow Glazier if the tater bug had yet appeared in her garden and to offer to lead her some paris green to dope him with if he had. No, the bug had not appeared. But the deacon had other things to say. Leaning on the well curb and the widow standing in her kitchen door, he observed:

"I s'pose one can sit down on a stuffed chair?"

"Oh, yes!"

"And they don't make a body vain?"

"Never heard of it."

"And they are with the money you have to pay for 'em?"

"They surely are!"

"Well, we might get 'em. Shall we be married next month?"

"I—I dunno. What about your house?"

"Why, it's there in the same old place, ain't it?"

"Yes, but it needs repainting."

"You mean it wants another coat of whitewash. Well, me and you will do that together."

"But we won't, deacon. It's got to be paint—real paint, and two coats at that. It's got to be pea green with darker green for trimmings."

For the first time in his life the deacon lost consciousness and things whirled around with him When he braced up the widow was saying:

"And new front steps, and a new sidewalk, and a new picket fence, and a pump in the well, and then we must have brass bedsteads and china dishes."

The deacon got home with shaking knees and fell upon the bed and sent for the doctor and the minister The doctor said he'd get well, and the minister said he wouldn't lose his soul even by having a gold framed mirror in the parlor It was a terrible struggle, but after two weeks the day was set and a marriage duly followed. There were those who thought the deacon would droop and die, but he didn't. He is hale and hearty and very proud of his wife and house and stuffed chairs and things, and he may even have a bell at the front door before he goes hence.

TESTED AND PROVEN.

There Is a Heap of Solace in Being Able to Depend Upon a Well-Earned Reputation.

For months Palmer readers have seen the constant expression of praise for Doan's Kidney Pills, and read about the good work they have done in this locality. Not another remedy ever produced such convincing proof of merit.

Otto R. F. Smith, one mile out on Thorndike road, Palmer, Mass., says: "In the spring of 1901 I used Doan's Kidney Pills and found them of benefit in every way, in fact, I was so well pleased that I gave a public statement in their favor. My kidneys were badly disordered. My back ached constantly and I could hardly arise from a chair after sitting for some time. There was also a disagreeable feeling in my head and I was annoyed by a difficulty with the kidney secretions. Doan's Kidney Pills did their work quickly and well. I know of other persons who have used Doan's Kidney Pills with good result, and consequently I gladly give them my recommendation."

will never go back to the troublesome two-damper range

The cost of the food spoiled by mistakes in regulating the ordinary two-damper ranges amounts to a large sum.

The Single Damper of the Crawford affords absolute fire and oven control by one motion—slide the knob to "kindle," "bake" or "check," the range does the rest.

The Oven of the Crawford has cup-joint heat flues which heat everywhere alike and make it the quickest and surest of bakers.

The Two Hods (patented) in the base—one for ashes instead of the old clumsy ash pan—one for coal, is a great trouble-saving feature.

CHARLOTTE RUSSE.

Many cooks look upon a charlotte russe as something far beyond their ability to make and then turn to compounding of a more complicated pie or cake.

Select a mould having nearly straight sides and almost any kitchen closet furnishes a suitable pan or bowl. Brush a sheet of writing paper over with olive oil or melted butter, or use paradine paper. Cut a piece to fit the bottom of the mould neatly and a strip to lay round the sides; fasten with a pin.

Bake a sponge cake in a shallow pan and when 24 hours old it is ready for lining the mould. For the charlotte russe as illustrated cut a round piece with crust on one side, cut across twice and turn alternate layers over. Line the sides of the mould with inch-wide strips not over three-eighths of an inch thick, turning crust and crumb alternately to make light and dark strips.

For the filling soak one-quarter of a box of gelatine in two tablespoons of water dissolve with three tablespoons of boiling water. Beat one-half pint of thick cream and one-half cup of milk together until stiff, add two level tablespoons of powdered sugar, a teaspoon of vanilla flavoring and the dissolved gelatine. Beat continuously and when the mixture begins to stiffen turn into the cake-lined mould.

He Was Vanquished at Last

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"You have heard of the Admirable Crichton, I presume," said Philip Aguenaldiz of Havana.

No one knew anything about him.

"Crichton," explained Aguenaldiz, "was so accomplished that he was called Admirable. Just before the Spanish-American war we had a man in Havana who I think would have tied him, at least in a fight. He was a Virginian and had come down thinking that the times in Cuba were propitious for a display of his accomplishments.

Naturally the sympathy of all Americans was with the Cubans. Fitz Hugh—that was the Virginian's name—was outspoken in his advocacy of their cause and, being a citizen of the United States, was protected from arrest so long as he didn't commit any overt act against the government. He frequented public places, where he would meet Spanish officers, giving expression to his opinion of the butcheries of Captain General Weyler. Some Spaniard would take him to task for doing so, and there would be a challenge and a duel and one less officer of the Spanish army fit for duty.

Fitz Hugh went out into the country one day and stopped at a hacienda belonging to a young widow. She being a sympathizer with the Cuban cause and Fitz Hugh being of the same—he was a handsome dog—she entertained him royally. They were sitting at the table, just finishing an excellent dinner, when along came marching two companies of Spanish troops. There was a major in command, and he halted his men before the gate of the hacienda and, walking up to the house, called for Senora Veudez, the owner He was invited into the dining room, where he informed the lady that, she being an avowed revolutionist, he proposed to take her and put her in commandero, or some other spread out Spanish word, which meant she was to be penned up with other rebel Cubans. The widow, being defenseless, signified that she would go with him, when Fitz Hugh spoke up.

"Senor major," he said, "it is a very easy matter for you to commit this act of tyranny upon a woman with a battalion of men behind you, but neither you nor any man in your command could do it alone."

"What do you mean, senor?"

"I mean that if you will give me an opportunity I will defend the lady against you singly, and, after you, against any and all your officers, and, after that, against any and all your men, I to meet each adversary singly. If I put you all out of the fight the lady to remain where she is."

"Who are you, senor?"

"I am an American citizen."

"Ah! An American. We are having much trouble with you Americans exciting these Cubans to rebellion."

"You have a chance to punish one of them. Surely I cannot be expected to vanquish every man in your command."

The major swore a blue streak about interference, threatening to take Fitz Hugh along with the widow, but at this Fitz Hugh smiled, saying that only a coward would decline such a proposition as he had made. The major was the son of one of the most prominent grandees of Spain, and his ideas of chivalry would not permit him to brook the taunts Fitz Hugh heaped upon him. He went out to his command and talked excitedly with his officers for awhile, then returned with every one of them—six in all—to the house. Rejoining Fitz Hugh and the widow, he told the former that his challenge was accepted. He would fight the American first, and if he were killed or disabled the ranking captain would take his place, and so on to the junior second lieutenant.

The widow forbade Fitz Hugh to enter upon so unequal a contest, but he only smiled that imperturbable smile of his and began to get ready for the fray. Taking off his coat and vest, he went outside with the officers. The major did the same, and they squared for an encounter with swords. Fitz Hugh called to the widow to come out on the veranda and witness the tournament, assuring her that there would be no blood spilled. On this assurance she acceded to his request.

The two men had not fought five minutes before it was evident that the American could have killed his adversary five times. Then he sent the major's sword flying in a circle in the air, and it came down fifty feet away, the point sticking in the ground. The senior captain was served the same way and the junior captain also. After that it was evident there was no need for any more officers to take a hand, but every one of them insisted on a trial, and all received the same treatment. Fitz Hugh vanquished every one of the seven men without giving or receiving a scratch.

Well, the major and every one of his officers took Fitz Hugh by the hand and swore he should have been a Spaniard in the days when Spanish gentlemen settled all their differences with the sword, as all gentlemen should settle them. Then they marched away, and Fitz Hugh told the widow he would like to go back to the table and finish a bottle of wine that had been half emptied.

But Fitz Hugh had met an enemy who was capable of vanquishing him. The widow was so infatuated with him that she wouldn't let him go. He married her and is running her hacienda today.

The Phantom Wagon Train

By SALLY MENDAM

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Shortly before the buffalo disappeared from the western plains I joined a hunting party to get a last crack at this noble game. We took the old freighting road from St. Joseph, Mo., to Denver, on which many a wagon train had passed before the completion of the Union Pacific road as far as Laramie enabled merchants to transport their goods by a much more advantageous route. We had been out but a few days when an old plainsman wandered into our camp. He was the ghostliest chap I ever saw. He looked to be very old—how old we could not tell—and yet he didn't seem to have any home. So far as we could judge, he was an inhabitant of the plains, sometimes living with white men, sometimes with Indians.

One night after the others had turned in I was before my tent sitting with the old plainsman smoking when I heard the creaking of a wagon. It was bright moonlight, and I saw toward the east what appeared to be an old fashioned plains schooner—a wagon drawn by four horses—coming toward us. We were a quarter of a mile from the road on which it was moving—the old St. Joseph and Denver freighting road—so that we got only a distant view of the team.

"I didn't know," I said to the plainsman, "that wagons pass over this road since the railroad has been finished."

"They don't; that's the phantom team."

I laughed incredulously.

"Ef you'd like to hear the story," he replied, "I'll tell you. But you won't believe it nohow."

The wagon lumbered along westward and disappeared. The old plainsman told me the yarn.

"One mornin' about twenty years ago a spick and span wagon with a new canvas cover drawn by four shiny horses was ferried across the Missouri river from St. Joe and struck out for Denver. Inside was a family of emigrants. Jim Ringler, the husband and father, drove, while the mother and four children were inside. They were goin' out to make a home in some of the new territories into which the western world was divided. There wasn't anything about the emigrant, his family, his wagon or his horses that wasn't prosperous looking. He had sold out his business and put the money into this outfit.

"Six months from that I met Ringler movin' south of Colorado Springs. His family didn't look so comfortable, a good deal of the paint was wore off his wagon, and his horses were lean. He said he'd been disappointed in findin' a good place to settle. He'd tried the plains and the mountains. The plains was too low and the mountains was too high. He was lookin' for somethin' intermediate. I recommended the foothills, and he said he'd try 'em.

"Purty nigh a year passed, and I met the Ringler family ag'in in Utah. There wasn't one of 'em that didn't look like a skeleton, there wasn't a bit of paint on the wagon, two of the horses had died, and the other two was skin and bone. He said he was still lookin' for a place to settle, but hadn't found anything to suit him.

"The last time I ever seen Ringler's outfit was after another year had passed. It was on this road. The family had just been murdered by a party of Indians. The wagon was turned upside down, the Indians had taken the horses, and the bodies of Jim Ringler, his wife and children were layin' beside the road scalped. I've seen 'em a good many times since, always on the old St. Joe and Denver road headin' westward. I've often tried to git near enough to 'em to see ef they was spick and span like they was when they started or with the spokes rattlin' from bein' dried out as they was when the Indians got 'em."

There was something about the creaking of the disappearing wagon, the story and the old plainsman to make me shudder. As for a real wagon passing over that deserted thoroughfare that had been abandoned for the railroad, it did not seem possible that any emigrant or freighter would take a route so dangerous and so expensive. Yet I could hear the wagon rattle, and, catching a faint view of it in the moonlight, I saw that it was a veritable schooner of the olden time. Without a word I said good night to the man who had told me the story and turned in.

In the morning the old fellow was not in camp. He had gone without leave as he had come without invitation.

That day we met some plains people. I told them about our visitor and the story he narrated. They had evidently heard the story before and seemed to believe in its ghostly attributes, for they stood listening to it in a sort of fright. When I had finished they asked me to describe the man who had told it.

"He was tall and thin, with a white beard and hair, a hook nose, not a tooth in his head and glittering eyes, sunk deep in their sockets. He might be any age from seventy to a hundred. There was a scar of a terrible gash he had received right across his cheek"—

My listeners scattered in every direction, except one old fellow, who stood shivering and crossing himself.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

In "The Corsican—A Diary of Napoleon's Life in His Own Words," Bonaparte tells how, as an obscure soldier, he witnessed some of the opening scenes of the revolution: "I lodged Rue du Mail, Place des Victories At the sound of the tocsin and at the news that the Tuileries were attacked I started for the Carousel Before I had got there in the Rue des Petits Champs I was passed by a mob of horrible looking fellows parading a head stuck on a pike Thinking I looked too much of a gentleman, they wanted me to shout 'Vive la nation!' which I did promptly, as may easily be imagined".

A Helpless Invalid

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A woman who is sick and suffering, and won't at least try a medicine which has the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is, it would almost seem, to blame for her own wretchedness. Read what this woman says:

Richmond, Mo. — "When my second daughter was eighteen months old I was pronounced a hopeless invalid by specialists. I had a consultation of doctors and they said I had a severe case of ulceration. I was in bed for ten weeks, had sinking spells, and was pronounced to be in a dangerous condition. My father insisted that we try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and brought me six bottles. I soon began to improve, and before it had all been taken I was as well and strong as ever,—my friends hardly recognized me so great was the change."—Mrs. Woodson Branstetter, Richmond, Mo.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read what another woman says:—

Jonesboro, Texas.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for myself and daughters, and consider it unequalled for all female diseases. I would not be without it for anything. I wish every mother in America could be persuaded to use it as there would be less suffering among our sex then. I am always glad to speak a word of praise for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and you are at liberty to use this testimonial."—Mrs. James T. Lawrence, Jonesboro, Texas.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering from the same trouble?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

The testimonials which are constantly being published in the Pinkham advertisements are guaranteed to be absolutely genuine, honest, and given without reward in any way whatever.

San Francisco 1915

Announcement made of the free trip to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition

WORD has been received from Sunset, the Magazine of the Pacific and the Far West, of the organization of the Sunset Panama-Pacific Club. The Club offers a four-weeks' trip to the Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915, including railway fare, Pullman, diner, hotel accommodations, admission to the fair, side trips to points of interest, all in return for a little time each week to be devoted to the work of the Magazine.

The exposition is to be held to commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal, connecting the Pacific and Atlantic. From all indications it will be by far the greatest World's Fair ever held.

The Magazine has issued a very attractive booklet descriptive of the trip, and giving further particulars, which will be sent on application.

The membership is very limited and it is not likely that more than one or two applications will be accepted from this vicinity.

Requests for particulars should be sent to

What offers a better chance to the man of means than a strongly secured investment of this kind? In what better way can a young man or woman, now in prosperous circumstances, prepare for the future and old age, when perhaps an annuity will be needed, or how can parents more easily provide for their children's future than to buy for them orchard tracts which after five years will bring steady incomes and independence for life. THE MOST MONEY EVER.

Monday's Appropriations Pass All Previous Records.

TOTAL IS SOMETHING OVER $101,000.

Sewers and Permanent Roads Get Big Slice. Very Little Opposition To Anything.

The appropriation of a maximum amount of money in a minimum amount of time was the record of the annual appropriation meeting last Monday. The total amount is a trifle over $101,000, and it was all done in strictest harmony in a trifle over four hours. The committee of 15 reported favorably on almost every article which called for an appropriation of funds, and the voters had evidently heard the song, "I want what I want when I want it," for they wanted everything approximately—and got it. The action of the committee of 15 should not be placed to their discredit; it is fair to them to say that their deliberations were thorough and intelligent, and their recommendations could hardly have been otherwise when the merits of the articles were considered But there has never before been so many meritorious articles in the warrant; never so many asking for things which the town needed—necessities, not luxuries. Heretofore it has rather been a custom to appropriate about so much money, for the most necessary items in the warrant,—or those which could not be dispensed with,—and get along without money for the rest. This year it was the evident intention to have everything that was desired.

As a result of the action taken, the town will become the possessor in the near future of an anto chemical fire truck. Three Rivers will have a considerable number of sewers and a strip of permanent road, the offices of school superintendent and principal of the high school will be separated, and the school teachers will receive a raise in pay. Permanent road will also be built in Palmer and present road which is in bad condition will be repaired The town will not, however, elect its selectmen for a three-years' term next year, this having been voted down most emphatically. When the article was brought up Mr. Upham of last year's board gave reasons why a change to the proposed method would be desirable. In reply T. J. Moran read a letter from ex-Senator Herbert C. Parsons of Greenfield to Judge Thomas W. Kenefick of Palmer, in which he hoped that the town of Palmer would not make the mistake which Greenfield and North Adams had, in decidlug to elect selectmen as proposed. The motion to make the change was lost.

There was a generous attendance at the meeting, and Thomas J. Moran was elected moderator. H. W. Stimson and P. M. Shearer were elected field drivers, and J. M. Allen, C. P. Haynes and R. L. Bond measurers of wood and bark; C. H. Keith was elected tree warden. It was voted to hire a lockup and the matter was left with the selectmen. The reports of the town officers as printed were accepted. A committee consisting of G. L. Warriner, H. W. Brainerd, C. D. Holden, J. F. Foley and R E. Cummings was appointed to consider improved quarters for town officers The treasurer was authorized to borrow $30,000 in anticipation of the taxes of the year. All unexpended balances in the treasury and the license money not otherwise applied will be used to rednce the tax levy. It was also voted to borrow $25,000 to meet notes coming dne this year. The committee on town accounts reports in favor of asking the state bnrean of statistics for an audit of the town's accounts, which was ordered done.

Interest at the rate of 6 per cent will be charged on taxes after October 1st and the salary of the collector will be $500. The sum of $200 was voted to suppress the illegal sale of liquor. The library association was given $1500, with a $500 balance left from last year's appropriation, which through an error was not drawn before the town's fiscal year had closed. The usual appropriations were made for conveying pupils to the public schools and for Memorial Day. It was voted that the construction of all new sewers be left with the selectmen, they to advertise for bids and the work to be done by contract. The matter of lighting the streets was left with the selectmen with an appropriation of $4800. The sum of $500, plus the earnings and a balance of $290, was appropriated for care of cemeteries. The snm of $500 was appropriated for new sidewalks and left in the hands of the selectmen, as was also an appropriation of $1600 for night police. The public is invited, also the children in the upper grades and high school.

The Palmer Historical Society will hold its next meeting on Tuesday evening of next week, in the reference room of the public library, at 7.30 sharp. O. P. Allen, curator of the society, will speak on "The evolution of Palmer village." The public is cordially invited to attend. Mr. Allen has long been an ardent student of local history, and his many years' residence in town peculiarly fit him to speak on the subject he has chosen. His remarks will be well worth hearing.

A fire in the grass in the meadow near the plant of the Worcester County Gas Company's plant about midnight last Friday caused a hurry-up telephone call for help. The fire was over the line in Monson, but Chief Summers and a few men hustled down and put it out. The blaze was started by a locomotive, and was humping right along ahead of a stiff breeze toward the gas works, having a generous amount of long dry grass on which to feed.

There was a slight thunder shower Monday evening, and if the signs are true we are booked for 26 more of them during the summer, the first occurring on the 27th. The second came Wednesday evening, accompanying a hard rain for about three hours. The lightning was rather sharp at times, and the electricity gave the street railway and electric light people considerable bother. The lights on South Main street and on the Warren circuit were put out about 9 40, and the car due in Palmer at 9 15 from Monson was stalled at Moloney's and had to be towed in.

Court Square Theater Attractions.

The musical play "The Girl of My Dreams" will be at the Court Square theater Springfield next Monday and Tuesday evenings. Such delightful music, such delicious comedy, such magnificent stage pictures, are seldom combined in one musical piece, and the exceeding attractiveness of it all is enchanced by the excellent company in the various roles and the pretty chorus. The libretto is of decided interest. There is no lack of comedy, which is of the kind that amuses and entertains. Combined with the humor is a pretty touch of sentiment and romance. The music is glorious and is sung in a manner that brings out all of its charm.

"Madam X," the drama which has had such a successful season in Boston, will be the attraction next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, with Saturday matinee. In all dramatic literature it is doubtful whether there is anything more moving. Thrill follows thrill and the interest of the audience is held for three solid hours during which the tale of the downfall of pretty Jacqueline Floriot is told She was a butterfly creature, living in a suburb of Paris, who found life with her son and husband humdrum and listening to the voice of the tempter, eloped, to find herself twenty years later a victim of drugs and dissipation, charged with the crime of having killed her lover. The cast and production is splendid.

Duncan Smoked In Church.

Sir Walter Scott in his "Heart of Midlothian" refers to one Duncan of Knockdunder, an important personage, who smoked during the whole of the sermon from an iron pipe tobacco borrowed from other worshipers. We are told that at the end of the discourse he knocked the ashes out of his pipe, replaced it in his sporran, returned the tobacco pouch to its owner and joined in the prayer with decency and attention.

A Joke at Sea

To While Away the Tedium of a Long Voyage

By REGINALD D. HAVEN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

A party of travelers sat chatting on the deck of a Pacific liner, and the conversation turned upon British lords marrying American heiresses. One of the party whispered to a lady sitting next to him:

"That Englishman is one of 'em. He's going over for a multimillionairess."

"Which one?" asked the lady interested.

"The short, thick one. The other is his lordship's secretary."

Young Peterson, who made this statement, was a great wag. He did not expect it to be believed and was astonished later when one of the girls of the party said to him:

"Do you know that one of those Englishmen is an earl going over to America for a rich wife?"

"You don't mean it!" said Peterson with feigned astonishment.

Peterson winked at a man standing near to follow him, and the two went off together.

"By Jove, Charley," said the wag, "I've got something that will help to kill time and give us lots of fun besides during this long voyage. For a joke I told one of the ladies that that sawed off Britisher is a lord going to America to marry a big fortune and that the other one was his secretary. She took it all in earnest, told the story to the rest of the party, and it came back to me."

"Well?"

"Well, don't you see that all these women aboard—there are some high steppers among them—will be sticking to him like a bear to honey?"

"But the Englishmen will hear of it and deny it."

"Suppose they do; we can say the earl is traveling incog. and won't admit his identity. Besides, I doubt if he will object to sailing under false colors; he'll be treated royally."

"But the other, the secretary; it's my opinion he's a gentleman and won't consent to any such imposition."

"It's no imposition for him to play an unimportant part. Besides, if he denies the story he won't be believed."

His lordship was Thomas Sully, a bagman, or what in America we call a commercial traveler. Peterson told him of the plot, and he entered into the spirit of it at once. Nothing was said to the other Englishman, whose name appeared on the list of passengers as Arthur Craven. He was of a serious cast and not likely to have any sympathy with the joke or consent to be one of the principal participants.

Great was the amusement derived by Peterson and his friend Tomkins, whom he had admitted to the secret, at the marked attentions paid to the bagman, whose title, Earl of Camberwall, was let out by the apparently incautious display of an envelope that he had addressed to himself for the purpose. There were many English people on board, all of whom were very obsequious to a nobleman of their own country. Several American girls, who, though not multimillionairesses, were well supplied with funds, entered the lists for the prize.

"Ladies," the bagman protested, "I assure you you are mistaken. I am a humble British subject with no pretense whatever."

"Oh, my lord," was the response, "how can you tell such a story? Your aristocratic bearing gives you away."

"You are incorrigible," the bagman would reply, delighted.

Peterson and Tomkins, who were present when this amusing episode came out, hurried away to conceal their laughter, and when they got out of hearing, exploded, then as soon as they could get Sully into the smoking room opened a bottle of wine for him, and Peterson assured him that his noble mien was what was enabling him to carry out the joke so well.

Meanwhile Arthur Craven heard nothing of what was going on, for, being a reserved man, he kept very much to himself. Some of the ladies remarked to Peterson that Mr. Craven did not seem to be very hard worked by his master, whereupon Peterson explained that the earl had no use for a secretary on shipboard and had expressly forbidden Craven to pay him any attention whatever lest he let out the incog. Craven spent most of the time reading. He did not smoke, therefore had no occasion to visit the smoking room, where he would have been astonished to see Sully vainly denying by words that he was an earl, but by his manner convincing those present that he was.

Like seeks like, and Craven, having made the acquaintance of a refined American family, found whatever companionship he seemed to need with them. Indeed, as the voyage progressed he showed greater disinclination to mingle with the others.

Meanwhile the Cunninghams—the American family he had become acquainted with—seemed to be equally pleased with him, and the voyage was not far under way before Craven and Miss Julia Cunningham, a girl of twenty-two, were seen a great deal together. One going on deck almost any part of the day in fair weather would see their steamer chairs in close proximity, and the couple appeared so interested in each other that they had no thought for any one else.

"Camberwell," said Peterson one day when he and the bagman were passing Craven and Miss Cunningham, punching the spurious earl in the ribs, "it seems to me that your secretary has got ahead of his master. That young lady he's making up to is the prettiest girl on the ship."

"You let my secretary alone," replied Sully facetiously. "All I want of him is not to give my incog. away till I've left the ship. The men are opening wine for me, and the women are feeding me on good things. But I want to get away before they find out the game we're working on them."

And so the ship sailed on. Every day was a repetition of another—meals, sitting on deck, constitutional walks between 4 and 6 in the afternoon and early to bed. One thing continued to enliven the voyage for Peterson and Tomkins—the attentions showered on Sully and the airs the bagman put on in support of his noble position. A number of the women found a pleasant excitement in angling for his lordship's favor.

It could not be expected that Craven should sail all the way to San Francisco without learning of his position as secretary to the Earl of Camberwell. One day when he joined Miss Cunningham on deck he noticed that she received him with an air of disappointment. It was not long before the secret was out.

"I have heard," she said, "that there is a British nobleman on board and you are his secretary."

Craven looked at her in astonishment.

"What an actor you are!" she said, with a slight coldness in her voice.

Craven said nothing. He was thinking. Finally he asked:

"And who is my master?"

"You know well enough without my telling you."

"Tell me, please."

"The short Englishman who calls himself Sully."

"Thanks," replied Craven. "And now since you have discovered that I am merely an understrapper to an English nobleman I presume you are through with me."

"No," said the girl. "I admit I am disappointed, but I have no reason to give up your companionship."

Craven chatted about ordinary matters for a few minutes, then excused himself. Seeing Sully, who was at the time with Peterson, Craven went to him and asked for an explanation of the story he had heard. Peterson told how they had fallen into perpetrating the joke, apologized and offered to do anything in his power to relieve Mr. Craven of his share. "But," he added, "I fear no denial will avail as to the principal character, though, if you like, I think he can deny your part in it in a way that will be believed."

"Let the matter stand as it is," said Craven. "Since I have been his lordship's secretary thus far I will remain in his service during the rest of the voyage."

From that time until after the ship left the Hawaiian Islands it was observed by those who noticed Mr. Craven's attentions to Miss Cunningham that he was not with her as much as before. This was not the lady's fault. Mr. Craven, from the day she showed disappointment in having learned that he was the secretary of a very unattractive nobleman, was very chary of her attentions. Moreover, he made no further denial of the story. But as time wore on and Miss Cunningham found the days very long and the voyage very tedious without his society, she encouraged him to return to her side when she was on deck and showed by her manner that if she had not forgotten his position she ignored it.

Some time before the ship reached San Francisco it was evident to the passengers that if the earl was going to America for a wife his secretary need not look for one there, having found one on shipboard. Then all of a sudden there was a noticeable flutter in the Cunningham family, and Mr. Craven and Mr. Cunningham were seen in conference on the after deck, where there was no one to hear them. From that time till the end of the voyage, which was but a few days, there were unmistakable signs that Mr. Craven had, or would, become a part of the Cunningham family.

"What's the matter with your lordship," said Peterson, slapping Sully on the back. "You're going to America for a wife, and your secretary has got one right under your nose aboard ship."

"My dear fellow," replied the earl, "my secretary costs but a few thousands. Any woman who gets me must come down with millions."

They both laughed merrily and went into the smoking room for refreshments.

The day before reaching port the captain, as is usual on liners, gave a dinner to the passengers. When coffee was brought on he rose and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, there has been a joke perpetrated by some good fellows among you for amusement. Not wishing you to go ashore deceived, they desire me to say that the Earl of Camberwell is really Mr. Sully, and Mr Sully has given me his word of honor to that effect.

"Nevertheless we have had a real nobleman aboard. From the first I have been aware that Mr. Craven is Baron Craven, a distinguished British traveler. He is not going to the States for a rich wife, for he is very rich himself. Besides, from appearances he has found one aboard this ship. Indeed, I am authorized to make the announcement to you."

All looked for Craven and the Cunninghams. Then it was noticed for the first time that they were not in their accustomed seats.

A Bird That Is Feared.

The elster (Pica candata) is a bird that is respected and feared throughout south Germany. It belongs to the raven tribe and is about the size of a dove, with black and white feathers and long, pointed tail. It builds its nest in orchards, and its life is sacred. If it is seen three times in succession on the same housetop in a place remote from its home it is believed to be a sure sign of death in that house. If it flies over a house where any one is ill and gives its peculiar cry the sick person is sure to die, but if it does not scream the patient may recover. It is better for the sick person if the bird does not come near. No one could be hired to bother these birds for fear they might seek revenge, and if by chance one of them should die it is a sign of bad luck to the owner of the property where it is found. The bird is a valuable insect destroyer and in this way probably more than compensates for the fear it occasions among the farmers.

Cursing In Korea.

A strange way of cursing is that of the Korean. His ordinary swear word is "Oemma," or "You brute." The Japanese have the same partiality for this term of endearment. But according to the Oriental Economic Review the Korean considers himself especially abusive when he calls a person his child or grandchild. When he wants to call somebody down the Korean demands hotly, "Are you not my child?" And the angry retort is: "What! I your child? You are my grandchild." Then the first goes a step further and cries, "You are a grandchild of my grandchild!" to which the rejoinder is: "You conceited fellow! Have you forgotten that you are a grandchild of a grandchild of my grandchild?" When their vituperation reaches its climax the people of Chosen at last come to the occidental standard of exclaiming, "You grandchild of a dog!"

Colored Hailstones.

Red hail is not unknown, even in Great Britain, for in May of 1885 there was quite a heavy fall of it at Castlewellan, in County Down. Red and white fell together, and the red hue was not merely on the surface of the pellets, but went through and through When one was squeezed between the fingers it stained them.

At Minsk, in Russia, an even stranger hail shower had fallen five years before Some of the pellets were ring shaped, and, while some were distinctly reddish, others were a bright blue. Some scientists declare that the coloring is due to various mineral salts.

A Feeling Allusion.

"I heard Uncle Joe talking about something he said he saw at the horse races, but I know better," confided the recently chastised small boy to his chum. "He saw 'em right here, and they're my ma and pa."

"What did he say?" asked the chum.

"He said he saw a spanking team."—Baltimore American.

TOWN BASKETBALL TEAM.

Fast Aggregation Has Won Every Game But One This Season.

The Monson basketball team has completed a very successful season, winning five out of six games, and only the fastest teams in this part of the state were played The only team which defeated the home team was one representing the All-Stars of Palmer, lead by Tom Durkin. It was the second game of the season, and with a new man in the Monson lineup the visitors, after an exciting game, won out by the score of 38 to 23. All the other games were decisive victories for the team. After the Palmer game, Tom Durkin was signed with Monson and played center, putting up a very fast and clean game, securing 22 baskets. He is six feet in height and weighs 200 ponnds, which enabled him to ontplay his opponent in each game. His method of shooting was different from that of his team mates; his baskets were clean ringers, not depending on the bank boards at all. Giffin was the high scorer for the year. His position was right forward, and he scored 40 baskets. Faulkner played left forward and was manager and captain of the team. He was second high scorer, with 32 baskets. Osborne, the left guard, was the center of the team work and was considered the best rnnning gnard that ever played on the local floor He scored 22 baskets from the floor. Moran, his mate at right gnard, usually managed to hold his man scoreless and succeeded in getting 18 donble conniers from the floor.

Saucers and Finger Bowls.

Drinking from the saucer was not a social solecism seventy-five years ago In fact, sets of old china may still be found intact that include dainty tabloids upon which the cup was to rest while the contents, taken from the saucer, were imbibed and from the attending noise apparently almost inhaled by the drinker. One spoon was regarded as sufficient for all courses of food as well as drink, and the overworked knife did duty both for cutting and carrying. As for finger bowls, did not the late Senator Tom Benton confide to his diary that his first experience with them was at a dinner given by President Van Buren? "The president," said he, "dipped his fingers daintily in the bowl and dried them upon his napkin, but I rolled up my sleeves and took a good old fashioned wash." —Boston Transcript.

Shark Soup.

In Ceylon there is a considerable trade in the oil of the white shark. The fins of the animal are very rich in gelatin and are used largely by the Chinese for making soup, of which they declare that the turtle soup so prized by epicures in this country is but a distant and feeble imitation.

Mrs. John Whiting, 14 Park Avenue, Ware, Mass., says: "I suffered from lumbago in its worst form and was growing worse so steadily that I despaired of ever being cured. I felt tired nearly all the time and had no ambition to do anything. My back ached severely and I was in a bad way when I learned of Doan's Kidney Pills and procured a box. Through their use I rapidly grew stronger, the headaches ceased, and I continued taking this remedy until all symptoms of kidney trouble had disappeared. I owe a great deal to Doan's Kidney Pills and gladly recommend them to other sufferers from kidney complaint."

If Canada Had Been Ceded to Us.

But for the wisdom of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin England would have ceded Canada to us at the close of the Revolutionary war. Washington and Franklin knew that if Canada had been ceded to the colonies France, from which Canada had been wrested some twenty years earlier, would have demanded that country as indemnity for the expense she was put to in the war for our independence. With the French flag restored in Canada it would have been a matter of a very short time when we would have been at war with France, and to save us from defeat there is nothing more certain than that we would have appealed to England. The aid would have come, and come swift and irresistible, and the chances are we would have returned to our allegiance to the crown of England, for it was years between the treaty of peace and the formation of the Union, plenty of time to get into a quarrel with France over some dispute as to boundary or fishing.—Washington Post.

Why Gold Is a Precious Metal.

Pure or fine gold will stand any test it may be put to in comparison with other metals. It can be rolled or hammered, extending it in any direction, until it becomes transparent. It can also be drawn into a thread as fine as human hair. It melts at about 2,000 degrees F., and, though it may be kept in a molten state for an indefinite time, it loses none of its weight, even should the heat be increased. The color is unaffected by air, water or heat and will stand any test of oxidation. No simple acid will dissolve or attack pure gold In conjunction with silver gold is the first metal with which man became acquainted and is the most valuable by reason of the vast number of uses to which it is put. It is found in almost every country in a metallic state and nearly always in crystals. The old Egyptian symbol for gold signified divinity and perfection. The chemical term used today is aurum.—New York Press.

A long, slow friendship is the best; a long, slow enmity the deadliest.—Merriam.

A Box That Moved of Itself

By GROVER J. GRIFFIN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

There's no telling what young people between childhood and man or woman hood will do. There is a case on record of a girl of thirteen shopping with her mother who disappeared in a throng. The police hunted for her for a long while without getting any trace of her. The case was given up as one of those mysterious disappearances that are never solved. But the girl turned up finally, and what do you suppose was the cause of her disappearance? She had gone off voluntarily through a whim, or, rather, a romantic desire to try the world on her own account.

But a stranger case than this came under my observation. I am a freight agent on a railroad, and it happened in the freight house in which I am employed. One afternoon I received a box about six feet long by two feet broad and deep. It weighed, I should think, about a hundred pounds. It was marked: "Glass. Handle With Care. This Side Up." Near one end was also written, "If Stood on End This End Up."

I received the box on the platform, and, since I didn't care to be saddled with broken property, I laid it carefully on a truck, wheeled it into the freight house and, being crowded for room, stood it on end, being particular to put the end up as directed. I noticed that the top was neither nailed nor screwed on, and I wondered how it had been fixed as firmly as it was. But this was merely a passing thought, for I didn't take the interest and had not the time to investigate the way lids were fastened, provided they were secure.

I received the box about 6 in the evening and after disposing of it and other freight locked up and went home to supper. Having some statements to make up in the evening, I returned to the freight house, lighted up and went to work in the little space fenced off for an office. I was figuring when I heard a cough outside.

The idea occurred to me that some one was in the freight house. The door being right beside my office, no one could have entered without my knowing it; consequently some one had come in surreptitiously. No one would be likely to do that except for the purpose of robbery. All this passed through my brain in one-tenth the time it has taken to tell it. The first thing I did was to open a drawer in my desk and take out a revolver.

Thus armed, I went out in among the freight and looked about. I admit I dreaded being shot from a dark corner, but for that matter I could have been shot while sitting at my desk. I saw nothing, heard nothing, and after walking about for awhile I made up my mind I had been mistaken. I started to go back to the office and had reached the door when I heard a giggle.

All idea of fear left me at once. Tossing my revolver on to my desk, I turned and went back for another hunt. Passing the box that had been marked to be carefully handled I noticed that instead of the top one of the sides faced me. I knew very well that the box could not have moved itself and suspected that here was the solution of the matter. Going up to it, I began to pull it about, when the top came off and out stepped a girl about fifteen years old. The most astonishing thing about her was that her face was on a broad grin.

"Well, I'll be hanged!" I exclaimed.

Her response was a giggle the same as I had heard shortly before.

"Who are you?" I asked.

"A runaway."

"From where?"

"From home."

"What did you run away for?"

"Oh, it's an elopement."

"Rats! You're nothing but a child. Where's the young feller in the case?"

"Hiding behind the boxes. I let him in at the window while you were gone."

I hastily examined the lid of the box and found it had been held in place by clamps on the inside that could be easily turned. Then I called to the young fellow to come out of hiding. I heard him climbing over the boxes from the back part of the house and presently he came down into the dim light. He wasn't much older than the girl.

"Now, you children tell me all about this escapade at once," I said.

The girl made the explanation. She told me that she loved "Willie," as she called him, and that she knew her parents would not consent to a marriage since they were so young, so they thought that they would elope. Willie had proposed the plan they had adopted. He had made the box, put her in it and shipped her as freight to my station, where he proposed to join her

"And now," she added, "won't you just go like a dear, good man for a clergyman? We love each other and would like to be married at once. Consider my reputation."

"You little chit!" I replied, astounded at her impudence. "Do you suppose I'm going to aid in the marriage of two children just out of the nursery You come into my office and stay there till I telegraph your parents."

The girl, who had taken the lead from the first, begged hard to induce me to let them go their way, but I was obdurate.

I locked them in the office and went out to send a telegram. When I returned they had got out, but how I don't know. I never heard of them afterward.

Not the Answer He Expected.

Whitefield, whose dramatic appeals to his listeners were always a noteworthy part of his sermons, once preached to a body of seamen in New York. In the course of his sermon he introduced the following words:

"Well, my boys, we have a clear sky and are making fine headway over a smooth sea before a light breeze, and we shall soon lose sight of land. But what means this sudden lowering of the heavens and that dark cloud rising from the western horizon? Hark! Don't you hear the distant thunder? Don't you see those flashings of lightning? There is a storm gathering. Every man to his duty! How the waves rise and dash against the shipl The air is dark. The tempest rages! Our masts are gone! The ship is on her beam ends! What next?"

The hands of every sailor were gripping the pews in front of them, and a wild excitement was in their eyes. And when the preacher reached the climax of his dramatic speech they sprang to their feet in a body and shouted. "Take the longboat!"—New York Sun.

Tramps and Cuff Muzzlers.

The most curious article in the tramp's outfit bears an appropriately odd name—the "cuff muzzler." It consists of the leg of an old stocking cut up into short lengths and worn over the wrist like a thick mitten, and its object is to increase the circumference of the wrist to such an extent that a constable cannot easily slip a handcuff over it.

Indeed, a pair of "cuff muzzlers"—which are worn by none save veteran roadsters—make it very difficult for a constable alone and unaided to handcuff their wearer. Tramps' tools bear puzzling names. Particularly cryptic is "fiddle," the term for a big nail carried by the "spike ranger" or itinerant who goes from one casual ward to the next. Should he fall into the hands of the police it is used in "onkum worrying"—that is, separating the strands of hard rope.—Baltimore American.

A Woman's Letter.

Women, it is generally admitted, write much better letters than men. M. Marcel Prevost discovered the reason for this superiority. "The obvious meaning is never the one we should read into a woman's letter There is always a veiled meaning Woman makes use of a letter just as she employs a glance or a smile, in a way that is carefully thought out and with an eye to effect. And, after all, does a woman's hat serve to cover her head? Does a woman's parasol keep off the sun? Why, then, should a woman's letter serve to convey her real thoughts to the person addressed, just like the letters of some honest grocer, who writes, 'I send you five pounds of coffee,' because he really does send you five pounds of coffee?"—London Spectator.

Long Distance Courtship.

A lady was one day approached by her Scotch maid with the information that she was about to leave. "What is the cause of this sudden decision, Mary?"

"I think I'll be a-marryin'."

"Indeed, and whom, may I ask?"

"The mon that sits across in the kirk o' Sundays."

"But what is his name?"

"I diuna ken."

"What! You're surely not engaged to a man whose name you do not know!"

"Not engaged, my lady, but he's been lang lookin' at me, an' I think he'll soon be speakin'."—Housekeeper.

Matchmaking In Roumania.

In Roumania once every year is a fair of marriageable girls. The girl, with her relations, gets into a wagon, which also contains her dowry—linen, furniture and household matters—and all set off for the fair When they arrive the girls are drawn up in one line and the men in another, with their parents behind them Then if a young man likes the look of any particular girl he talks to her while the parents compare notes as to their possessions and their circumstances in life. If all is found satisfactory there's a marriage at once, and the bride is driven away by her husband to her new home.

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Elwood, Ind.—"Your remedies have cured me and I have only taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was sick three months and could not walk. I suffered all the time. The doctors said I could not get well without an operation, for I could hardly stand the pains in my sides, especially my right one, and down my right leg. I began to feel better when I had taken only one bottle of Compound, but kept on as I was afraid to stop too soon."—Mrs. Sadie Mullen, 2728 N. B. St., Elwood, Ind.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

In almost every neighborhood you will find women who have been restored to health by the Pinkham medicines. Inquire among them and see. Many would not have a testimonial published, but would talk about their cure to another woman.

Announcement made of the free trip to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition

WORD has been received from Sunset, the Magazine of the Pacific and the Far West, of the organization of the Sunset Panama-Pacific Club. The Club offers a four-weeks' trip to the Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915, including railway fare, Pullman, diner, hotel accommodations, admission to the fair, side trips to points of interest, all in return for a little time each week to be devoted to the work of the Magazine.

The exposition is to be held to commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal, connecting the Pacific and Atlantic. From all indications it will be by far the greatest World's Fair ever held.

The Magazine has issued a very attractive booklet descriptive of the trip, and giving further particulars, which will be sent on application.

The membership is very limited and it is not likely that more than one or two applications will be accepted from this vicinity.

A Developed Orchard of Only 10 acres in the Bitter Root Valley, Montana, Pays $2000 to $5000 Yearly.

What offers a better chance to the man of means than a strongly secured investment of this kind? In what better way can a young man or woman, now in prosperous circumstances, prepare for the future and old age, when perhaps an annuity will be needed, or how can parents more easily provide for their children's future than to buy for them orchard tracts which after five years will bring steady incomes and independence for life. REV. B. M'KEANY'S WILL.

Filed For Probate and Allowed On Wednesday.

EXECUTOR'S BOND SET AT $65 000.

There has been much speculation locally as to the will of the late Rev. B. McKeany of Bondsville, and there will be much interest in the terms, which are made known through the admission of the will for probate Wednesday. Rev. J. F. Griffin of Holyoke is named as executor, and is required by Judge Long to file a bond of $65,000 The amount of the estate is not made public, but there is reason to believe that it is not less than $100,000 The public bequests amount to $59,000, the largest being one of $25,000, which is to be expended for the saying of masses for the repose of the soul of Father McKeany and the souls of all his former parishioners, and all souls in purgatory. The peculiar condition of this request is that the masses are to be celebrated only by missionary priests in China, India and Africa, and in no other countries Rev. J. A. Walsh of the Boston cathedral is to be consulted as to the proper distribution of the money in these countries which thus becomes virtually a bequest for Catholic foreign missions. Father McKeany directed that the balance of his estate, after the payment of all other bequests, should be given to the same cause and under the same conditions.

This is not the only bequest for foreign missions contained in the will, since the sum of $10,000 is to be spent by the executor of the estate in establishing an endowment fund in some suitable institution, the income to be spent for the training of young men who intend to spend their lives in the missionary field in China, India or Japan. The executor is especially instructed to see to it as far as possible that the money shall be used for this and no other purpose forever.

A total of $7000 is given to the Roman Catholic bishop of Springfield for the use of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd. Two thousand of this is provided in the will, and the remainder is taken care of in a codicil. The sum of $5000 is given to Mercy Hospital in Springfield in the codicil. Father McKeaney left all his real estate with the exception of one farm in Belchertown to the church of which he was rector, besides giving it $3000 in money.

Father McKeany died last December. His will was drawn up on August 17, 1910, and the codicil is dated December 3 J. B. O'Donnell of Northampton appeared for the will. The library and other personal belongings are given to his cousin, Rev. Francis McMurray of Woodstock, N. B Rev. Mr. McMurray, Rev. William H. Fitzpatrick and Rev. Mr Griffin are named in the will as executors, but the former two declined to accept the trust. The portion of the will containing the public and private bequests is as follows:

I have lived a long and busy life which I have endeavored to devote to the service of my God and my church. My living has been simple and my needs few. I hope I have done my duty in charity by the poor of my parish, for it has been my aim to render all the assistance needed to the worthy poor. My income as a priest of the church has always been small, but my expenses have been smaller and mainly from investments that have been made for me I find myself in my old age with some money. I feel myself morally indebted to my brothers for favors received in my boyhood and youth, and I shall remember them herein; but the bulk of my estate I shall give for the benefit of my people, the propagation of the faith, for the benefit of the souls departed and to the church of God. To that end I commend my soul to God, its maker, and I hereby give, bequeath and devise all my worldly property and estate, real and personal, after the payment of all legal obligations, as follows:—

To my half-brother, William, of Newark, N. J., $1000.

To my executors, $25,000, to be expended by them for masses for the repose of my soul and the souls of my former parishioners, parents, benefactors and all souls in purgatory. These masses are to be said by missionary priests in China, India and Africa. I request that my executors shall consult with Rev. J. A. Walsh of the Boston cathedral, as to how this money should be distributed in the countries named.

I give the sum of $500 to the person who shall be in my regular service as my housekeeper at my decease; I give $100 to the male servant who shall be in my regular service at the time of my decease.

To the Roman Catholic bishop of Springfield I give $2000, in trust for the Sisters of Good Shepherd, to be expended in Springfield; $2000 in trust for the Sisters of Providence; $3000 for the use and benefit of the Catholic church in Bondsville.

To Rev. Francis McMurray of Woodstock, N. B., I give $2000, in trust for the order of the Good Shepherds and the Misericordia Home for aged men, both in St. John, N. B.

To my former housekeeper, Bridget McQuillan of Northampton, I give $500; to Mrs. Marcus Burke of Boston, my former housekeeper, I give $200; I give the Leary farm in Belchertown and $500 in money to Ellen Kelley, who has long been my housekeeper.

To the Roman Catholic bishop of Springfield I give the rest of my real estate in trust for St. Bartholomew's Catholic parish in Bondsville.

To my executors I give $10,000 to be paid to some educational institution as an endowment fund, the income of which shall be applied to paying the educational expenses of young men studying for the Catholic priesthood while in their philosophy and theological years, who are certain to enter the missionary field in China, Japan or India. My executors shall take special pains to see that the provisions of this clause shall in all probability be complied with forever.

To my brother, Felix, of San Francisco, I give $2000.

Sudden Death on Electric.

Woman Enters Car, Pays Fare, and Dies Before Help Can Be Given.

Miss Ellen Lord of Glastonbury, Ct, 68, died suddenly on an electric car near Fay's bridge on the Monson line last Saturday afternoon. Miss Lord boarded the car at the Fay farm, paid her fare and asked for and received a transfer to Ware. Her head then dropped back on the seat, and she was dead before assistance could be given her. The body was brought to Phillips' undertaking rooms in Palmer and Medical Examiner J. P. Sohnsider summoned.

Miss Lord had been for some time engaged as housekeeper for Mrs. Josephine Fay Baker, and was leaving last Saturday for a visit of a few weeks with friends in Ware, after which she planned to return to Mrs. Baker's. She was apparently in the best of health when she left the house. She leaves a sister, Mrs. F. H. Covell of Glastonbury, who came to Palmer and took charge of the body, which was taken to Glastonbury for burial.

LACK OF GOOD TENEMENTS.

May Prevent Removal of Wright Business Here.

MACHINERY AND WORKMEN TO COME.

If the Later Can Be Properly Housed, But Not Otherwise. Dozen Tenements Wanted.

The lack of a dozen tenements in the wire mill district or west of the Point of Rocks is an obstacle — If the absence of a thing may be called an obstacle — which seems likely to prevent the removal of machinery and work from the Worcester mill of the Wright Wire Company to Palmer, and the permanent employment here of an additional number of experienced and high-priced men.

In another column of this paper will be found an advertisement of the Wright Wire Company for tenements, which they are willing to lease for a term of years. It has been rumored for some time that the company had in contemplation the removal of some of its Worcester plant to Palmer, and a request to Mr. George M. Wright, president of the company, has brought the following reply:

"This company is desirous of and is considering plans for the removal of some its work now done at Worcester, to its Palmer mills, and contemplating the erection of a building there for the accommodation of machinery to be moved from our Worcester mills This change will require the employment of some 15 to 20 additional hands at the Palmer mills, and the one stumbling block is where the additional help, which will have to be experienced help, would be housed. We are desirous of knowing before going ahead with this plan, whether we are going to be able to obtain new tenements in the neighborhood of the wire mill for the accommodation of this additional help If we feel reasonably assured that the prospects are good for a dozen tenements being built in the wire mill district, or west of the Point of Rocks during this spring and early summer, then we shall proceed to make plans to move a lot of our Worcester machinery to Palmer by September. We probably shall erect a building at Palmer, beginning the work at once. This will be done and certain of the furnaces occupying another building at No. 2 mill will be moved into the new building, but the Worcester machinery will not be moved to Palmer until we are certain that we can man it with help that can find tenements and be properly housed there."

The company has for a long time been troubled by a lack of tenements in this section of the town, and it will be too bad if Palmer should now lose the proposed increase in weekly wages paid through a failure to provide homes for the additional workmen needed, as well as the increased population and the increased valuation of the Wright plant. Land in the vicinity of the wire mill is not expensive, and a good opportunity is offered investors to secure a fair return on their money by erecting tenements in that sect on.

Ware Congregational Church Gets Bequest.

The will of the late Miss Sarah R Sage, a former resident of Ware, was filed in Boston Friday and was of interest to many in Ware, especially as a bequest of $3000 was made to the East Congregational church. Miss Sage, who lived to be 85, was born in Blandford, but when she was very young her father, the late Orin Sage, moved his family to Ware and Miss Sage did not give up her residence in Ware until about six years ago. Mr. Sage was a very prominent citizen in Ware years ago and was president of the Ware national bank. He had two daughters and one of them married William Hyde, father of the late William S. Hyde.

To her niece, Miss Hattie S Hyde, who lives in the former Sage home, was bequeathed the real estate in Ware and $1500, while $500 each was left to Mrs Henry K. Hyde of Ware, Mrs. Frederick E. Hawkes of Greenfield and Baroness Camille Eynard of France, the three daughters of William S. Hyde and grandnieces of the testatrix The total amount of the bequests made by the will is $176,000, and aside from the $3000 just mentioned all goes to missionary societies or institutions of learning.

HELD FOR INCITING FIRE.

Dry Goods Store Owner Denies Knowledge of Blaze.

A $300 STOCK INSURED FOR $1800.

Fire Starts Soon After Store Closed at Night, But Firemen Prevent Destruction.

The case of Louis Tallant of Springfield, charged with inciting and aiding in the burning of a stock of merchandise in Palmer on the night of February 18, was heard in the district court last Saturday. He was held for the grand jury in the sum of $1000, and furnished bonds.

Tallant was the owner of a stock of ladies' clothing kept in a small store on Church street. The store was in charge of Samuel Green, who was supposed to spend three days a week in the store and the other three on the road Green left the place shortly after 11 o'clock on the night of Saturday, February 18, and took the 11 15 electric car for Springfield. The fire was discovered a few minutes after the car had gone. The firemen found the interior pretty well ablaze, so much so that chemicals failed to hold it and water had to be turned on. The blaze was put out however before the stock was consumed and a fair estimate of its original value could be determined. An expert gave an opinion that the original value was about $300; on this there was insurance of $1800 When Tallant made claim for the insurance he was arrested. He testified Saturday that he knew nothing about the fire. Green has not been seen nor found since he departed.

The Chapman carriage was turned completely over, throwing the ladies into the top Fortunately the horse cleared himself from the carriage and ran about a mile before he was stopped. The carriages were badly smashed. The ladies were bruised and shaken up, but no bones were broken. The men were uninjured.

One of the features of the meeting was a criticism made by Selectman J. H. Walker relative to certain accounts of the former town treasurer, O P. Royce, who resigned last year. Mr. Walker claimed that since Mr. Royce made his official settlement with the town, when he turned his books over after his resignation, he (Walker) had found certain mistakes in some of the accounts which made it appear as if the town was entitled to about $600 more. He claimed that it had been discovered that there was a mistake in the panper account in connection with dealings with the city of Springfield, and also made in the dog fund accounts. Mr. Walker's claims were discussed in the meeting, and it was finally decided to appoint a committee, consisting of Mr. Walker and the town auditors, Alvin Hubbard and Myron Royce, to investigate fully the books, and if errors were shown to exist, to arrange with the former treasurer to pay over such additional amount as appeared to be legally due. Mr. Royce was present at the meeting but made no statement.

PALMER NEWS.

Well-Known Woman Dead.

Mrs. Ursula G. Stowe, 91, Passes Away at Early Hour This Morning.

Mrs. Ursula G. Stowe, 91, died early this morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frank N. Carpenter, on Thorndike street. She had been sick with the grip for the past two weeks, and this was the cause of death. Mrs. Stowe was in many respects a wonderful woman. In spite of her advanced years she enjoyed the best of health up to the time of her last sickness, with the exception of a slight difficulty in walking which she experienced only in the last two years. Her mind was as active and her intellect as keen as in her younger days, and her skill at repartee usually left her a winner in contests with younger minds. She took a keen interest in all that was going on abont her, and was able to read without glasses nntil the last.

Mrs. Stowe was born in Hyde Park, Vt. May 1, 1819, and so would have been 92, years old the first of next month. She was married May 2, 1839, to Solomon Stowe, and went to live on his farm in Morristown, Vt., where she spent the most of her life until his death in 1882; she then moved to the village of Morrisville and made her home there until three years ago last October, when she came to live permanently with her daughter. Previous to that time she had made it a practice to spend her winters here, and had visited here many times during the life of her son, the late Dr. W. H. Stowe, and had so become well known to many people, not only in this village but in neighboring towns. Mrs Stowe was a member of the Baptist church and numerous of its affiliated organizations She was an active temperance worker and did much for charity. She was also a member of the W. C. T. U

She leaves, besides the daughter in Palmer, one son in Montana; also two grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. There will be prayer at the house this evening at 7.30, Rev. O. S. Raspe of the Universalist church officiating; the body will then be taken to Morrisville, Vt., for burial, and funeral services will be held there in the Methodist church Sunday afternoon at 2 30. By a peculiar coincidence, Rev. Mr. Raspe has recently come to Palmer from Morrisville.

Main Street Property Sold.

A. W. Holbrook Buys Land Between the Burns Hotel and E. Brown Estate.

An important real estate deal was completed this morniug, when the land on Main street between the Hotel Burns and that owned by the E. Brown estate was sold by C. B. Fiske to Arthur W. Holbrook The tract is abont 70 feet front and extends back approximately 150 feet, and is the finest piece of unimproved property on the street, as it is almost squarely in the center of the business section, at the foot of Thorndike street. Mr. Holbrook's plans are not fully developed yet, but it is probable that he will in the near future erect a large business block on the property.

The land is now occupied in part by the building containing the Journal office and by the Palmer garage, owned by John Lewis. The office of the Journal will be moved as soon as possible—probably by the first of May—to Central street, where it will have the entire ground floor of the Masonic building, now occupied by the Lloyd harness shop and Ye Bay Path Printery, the latter having been owned by the proprietors of the Journal office since the purchase of the plant from C. L Johnson abont four years ago The partition between the two rooms will be removed and the two printing plants consolidated under the name of the Palmer Journal The paper has long needed additional room, and of late its rapidly increasing job printing business has made this almost imperative. The new location will give about 50 per cent additional floor space, in addition to a concentration of equipment which will mean increased facilities for both plants. Some changes will be made in the building, and when ready for occupancy the new quarters will he large, airy and light, valuable considerations in the prodnction of fine printing, and will be second to none when compared with sub urban offices in this section of the state.

Meeting of the Palmer Historical Society.

Notwithstanding the storm, the usual number was in attendance at the meeting of the Historical Society on Tuesday night.

The cnrator announced the donation of ten volumes of the vital records of that number of Massachusetts towns.

The evening was devoted to the consideration of the "Evolution of the village of Palmer," in an informal talk by O. P Allen. The speaker used as a setting for onr villag- life proper, the existence of the hamlet of half a dozen houses, extending from 1716 to 1838, giving in a series of word pictures the slightly varied scenes of 122 years And in the same way the slow but sure growth of our village to the present days with sketches of some of the prominent men who have figured in our village life, and of the more prominent institutions which have aided our prosperity.

It was shown that the territory now covered by our village began in 1716 with a small log cabin; 10 years later three more log honses had been erected, that of John Kilburn at the Point of Rocks, whose farm of 100 acres extended thence sonth to abont the present Cross block. Next the farm of Joseph Wright of 72 acres, extending from Kilburn's to abont the present Church street. The next farm of 100 acres of Ebenezer Merrick ran thence to about the middle of the present agricultural park, joining the farm of John King at Tenneyville. Sixty years later in 1776, the first settlers had passed away and in their room there were but six families. In 1836 or 120 years from the first settlement there were bnt eight dwelling houses and a small one-room schoolhonse opposite the park, bnilt in 1789 Our village really began in 1838, with the addition to the above of a store and postoffice, where the Jonrnal office now stands, built and kept by S C. Billings. In 1843, five years later, there were 12 dwelling honses, two hotels, one laundry and two stores added. In 1859 there were 80 dwelling honses, besides many other buildings. To-day there are 450 dwelling houses, including the Wire Mill district, 23 large and small commercial blocks, four churches and one chapel, five hotels, one grammar school building with nine graded schools, a high school with 125 students. We have 32 streets against six in 1859 Our village to-day is np to date in its various appointments, in its successful institution and in its general tidy appearance.

Doings of the Legislature.

BOSTON, April 5, 1911

It was not as close a vote in the Senate for the proposed Butler statne as had been expected, for the resolve got only 13 votes to 22 against it, and one pair. This is the third time that the effort has been made, and it was weaker this time than before, in spite of the fact that for the first time, there was a favorable committee report in the first instance. The strength of yesterday's opposition was dne in part to the three Democrats,—Messrs Hoar, Hunt and Malley,— who voted against the statnte. It had been figured that all the Democrats wonld vote for it and that it would get Senators Nason, Hibbard and Denny (as it did) and perhaps some other Republicans Since the matter came np in the form of an appropriation and was defeated, there is nothing on which the matter can come up in the House. Therefore the matter is ended for this session, and it is quite probable that it is ended for good. It was one of the statements at the hearing against the statue that Butler was responsible for sending military supplies to the confederate troops for use against the soldiers under his own command near Norfolk. I happen to know that there is written testimony to this effect much stronger than anything which has ever been made public It is a question whether the time has come when it can be published, bnt it wonld appear that sooner or later it will become public property. How many persons are now living who had a part in the transactions it wonld be very difficult and probably impossible to ascertain. But if Butler's friends have any regard for his reputation, they will not stir np any hostility where it is wholly needless, as it is in case of the petition for a military statne.

Tnesday forenoon was held the first of the forenoon sessions of the year, beginning with a calendar which went on to Page 32, or a higher nnmber than has been seen for many years. There is a lively disposition to pass matters for debate and the disposal of business after the calendar has been called does not progress rapidly. For two days this week manifest delay has been caused by the rival ambitions of Messrs Walker and White of Brookline to be the Repnblican candidate for governor. Monday and Tnesday these men came into collision on the floor of the House, Speaker Walker having called some other member to the chair. As the Walker set of last year is involved, giving the governor power to investigate the finances of state institntions, Speaker Walker evidently feels bonnd to see that the law works well and to back np the governor's efforts to discharge his dnty under the law. As Mr. White is chairman of the ways and means committee, and knows what a mass of bnsiness is pending, he feels the need of progress, and he is not disposed to take the time for gubernatorial investigation which Walker believes courtesy to the governor demands On Monday the speaker had a vote of 100 to 6 against Mr White. Yesterday the scrap ended with the House voting the way the speaker wanted and Mr. White acquiescing snfficiently to avoid the appearance of defeat, though the debate showed clearly the strained relations between the two candidates. Evidence from various places in the state is to the effect that White is pntting in so much work that he must be regarded as a serious danger to Walker, which d[illegible] possible nntil recently. T[illegible] means neglecting his

To-day's action of importance to the five western counties was on the deer bill. Eloquent pleas for more humane methods were made by Mr Langtry of Springfield and Mr. Palmer of Stockbridge, each of whom had a bill of his own The House heard them attentively and applauded Mr. Palmer warmly for his graphic depiction of the glories of Berkshire and his plea for humanity for the deer, but on the vote, the House was almost unanimous against them The fact that the deer are very destructive of property went far to close the case against them The one case from Amherst, where Professors Waugh and Sears of the Agricultural College had $1500 worth of damage done to a young orchard made a deep impression. Members who were fully appreciative of the sentimental side of the case yet voted against changing the law. This is right in line with the opinion of the state board of agriculture, whose sympathies have been with the farmers. Mr. Avery of Charlemont spoke for the farmers of Franklin county, Mr Hardy of Huntington for those of Hampshire and Mr Ellis of Newton, who has two large milk farms in Barre, represented, for that purpose, Worcester county. So the deer must look out hereafter This action to-day leaves the law just as it has been.

The House showed its capacity for work this afternoon when it cut a great hole in the calendar which has been accumulating so much that it has been feared as a promise of an extra long session. Several pages of calendar were disposed of so quickly that members who thought that their particular pets would not be reached were taken by surprise and had to take care of them on short notice or actually get unanimous consent to go back and take them up after action had been taken on them. There is evidently a recognition by Speaker Walker and by other Republican leaders of the House that the time has come when long debates on matters of small importance must not be allowed. Mr Sloue of Worcester made that point when he moved the previous question to-day on the bill to extend the time for reporting by the commission on employment agencies and intelligence offices Norman H White of Brookline protested against the motion and held that the matter was of large importance, but the House sustained Mr. Stone As the Senate cleans its calendar every day, the prospect of a long session is not as dark to-day as it had been for weeks.

There has come ont this week the monthly bulletin of the state board of health and one of the items to be noticed in it is that since the previous visit of the agents of the board to a few towns for inspection of dairies, 52 dairies have ceased to produce milk for sale. Usually the number is larger, but this constant record, as has been previously pointed out, proves how the milk producers are being driven ont of business by high prices and excessive closeness of inspection

Salary-raising is not particularly in favor. For instance, quite an effort was made in the House this afternoon to raise the $2000 salary of Commissioner Daniel V. C Palmer of the department of weights and measures. His representative, Mr Haines of Medford, told the truth when he spoke of his high services and his reputation which extends all over the country on account of his good work, but when it came to raising his salary, the House took the word of one of the objectors that there would he no difficulty in filling the place well at the present salary, and the increase was voted down almost unanimously. It is quite probable that the increase of the members' salary, which has been assigned to Wednesday will also get a decided adverse vote.

Another instance of good conscience regarding the public service is seen in the report in the Senate this afternoon by the committee on rules, cutting out the proposed trip of the water supply committee to Pittsfield. The two places at this end of the state were retained in the order and the committee can go there, but when it comes to the expense of a trip to Pittsfield when the state's money can he saved, it is cut ont. So, after all, there is some virtue in this Legislature which some good people have regarded as hopeless beyond recovery.

The businesslike character of the report of Harvey S. Chase on the room in the bank commissioner's department, the lack of a complete system of time-cards, and other suggestions of reforms, indicate that there yet may be some practical accomplishments in the way of economy. The suggestions about state house employes' vacations calls attention to the soft snap which these clerks have enjoyed for many years.

State Auditor Turner is in very bad condition and there will soon doubtless be several candidates out in the open for his seat.
